Kuwait forms squad to combat hijackers

KUWAIT, stung by the hijacking of one of its jumbo jets by Shiite extremists, is to hire foreign experts to train a special anti-terrorist squad to combat sky pirates, security officials disclosed yesterday.

The sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the planned 100-strong force will be attached to the Interior Ministry after a six-month training programme in Kuwait and abroad.

They gave no other details and did not identify the foreign specialists.

Most Western European countries, including Britain, France, Italy and West Germany, have elite units who have been in action against terrorists over the last 20 years.

Al Seyassah daily reported yesterday that Kuwaiti security authorities, aided by unidentified foreign intelligence agencies, have identified the hijackers. It did not elaborate.

A wife can kick out her husband

CAIRO, April 25, (UPI): A Cairo court has ruled a wife may kick her husband out if she owns their home or holds the lease, a local press report said.

The cassation court said under Islamic law the responsibility of providing the home rests with the man, the newspaper Al Akhbar reported in today's editions.

The court, one of Egypt's highest, ruled a man is obligated to buy or rent living quarters which he should furnish for his wife. If the wife does so, then she is doing it "out of tolerance and not because of any prior obligation," the court said.

In this case, the court said the wife has the right to kick her husband out or bar him from the home.

Response

The court issued the ruling in response to a lawsuit filed by an unidentified woman who barred her husband from their apartment on the grounds she held the lease for it and owned the furniture.

A lower court ruled in the man's favour, arguing the marriage bond gave him the right of access to the apartment. The cassation court ruling reversed the lower court decision.

Many apartments in Egypt remain vacant because they are too expensive for most citizens, who face a lack of affordable housing.

Forgive and forget policy abandoned: Sheikh Saad

No ransom paid for hostages: Premier

HH the Crown Prince and Premier, Sheikh Saad Al Abdullah, has denied that a deal was struck with the air pirates or a ransom was paid to secure the release of the passengers aboard the hijacked Kuwaiti airliner, Al Jaberiya.

The Crown Prince called on all citizens to be cautious of those spreading such rumours.

In a meeting with Kuna's board chairman and editors-in-chief of local dailies at Al Shaab Palace on Sunday night, Sheikh Saad praised the PLO chairman for his efforts to free the hostages while in Larnaca, Cyprus and also the efforts exerted by the Algerian and the Cypriot authorities.

Information Minister Sheikh Jaber Mubarak Al Hamad also attended the meeting.

HH the Crown Prince talking with the editors-in-chief of local dailies.

Urged

The Premier recalled that while the hijacked plane was in Mashhad, Kuwait urged the Iranian authorities to keep the aircraft grounded until all passengers were freed. He refuted an Iranian statement saying that Iran proposed to Kuwait to storm the plane.

"This is incorrect and contradicts with truth and reality," said Sheikh Saad.

He noted that despite threats by the hijackers to kill all on board the plane if their demands were not met, Kuwait kept saying "no" to any kind of bargain or deal "no matter what the consequences."

He said: "Kuwait has proved to the whole world that it will not budge an inch from its principles."

"I always told you that the strength of the Kuwaiti people lies in the unity of the home front, and all said in one voice: 'We refuse to bow and we reject blackmail.'"

Replying to a question on Kuwait's stand on the rumours claiming that a deal was struck between the government and the hijackers, Sheikh Saad stressed: "We don't work in the dark. We have worked and will work for the interest of Kuwait and its people."

On the formation of a committee to find the loopholes in security measures which led to the hijacking, Sheikh Saad said the cabinet has already decided to form a special committee under the chairmanship of Justice Minister Dhari Al Othman.

Freedom

"The committee will have complete freedom and all the time it needs to conduct a thorough investigation into the incident," Sheikh Saad said, affirming that if any deliberate negligence was discovered, those responsible will "pay the price."

He noted that Kuwait has started implementing plans to train Kuwaiti youth in anti-terrorist techniques. He urged all Arabs to join hands in combatting terrorism.

The Crown Prince said that the government's "forgive and forget" policy is no longer valid, vowing that those who intend to infringe on the country's security will pay a dear price.

Asked if the lack of security on the hijacked plane was due to a dispute between the Ministries of Finance and Interior, he said: "We all have to wait for the report by the investigating committee."

Sheikh Saad was asked whether he thinks the Israeli intelligence, Mossad, had a role in the hijack. Sheikh Saad said there was no information available yet of Mossad's involvement, but added: "It will not appear strange if Mossad had a hand in the incident."

On the freedom of reporting about the hijacking the Crown Prince affirmed that the press is allowed to publish anything as long as it does not damage ties between Kuwait and Arab and friendly countries.

He said the arrest and trial of the hijackers will require intensive efforts and cooperation among the countries in the world.

The Premier expressed happiness over Iraq's liberation of the Faw peninsula and hoped Iraq will accept the UN resolution 598 to end the Gulf war.

Chirac to meet President in final round

Mitterrand advances bid for second term

PARIS, April 25, (UPI): Socialist President Francois Mitterrand and Conservative Prime Minister Jacques Chirac won a final round stand-off in May 8 French presidential elections but far-right candidate Jean-Marie Le Pen made a significant surge in the first round.

Results issued by the Interior Ministry today with 98 per cent of returns counted gave 71-year-old Mitterrand 33.90 per cent of the vote in yesterday's first round balloting, followed by Chirac, 55, who had 19.74 per cent.

Former Prime Minister Raymond Barre, 64, placed third with 16.49 per cent, followed by National Front leader Le Pen, 59, who garnered a surprisingly high 14.61 per cent. Le Pen's score was more than twice that of official Communist candidate Andre Lajoinie, who notched up only 6.86 per cent for one of the Marxist Party's worst showings in its history.

Indicated

The votes from overseas territories will be counted today. Mitterrand remained the favourite to win the May 8 final round. Barre pledged to support Chirac but indicated he would not tolerate any deal-making between the Prime Minister and Le Pen. Still, analysts said the outcome gave Le Pen a new Mitterrand casts his vote.

Barre has called for France to remain an "open and tolerant society which rejects xenophobia and racism." Chirac also urged a "more just, more generous" society but announced that he intended to "preserve the national identity" by fighting illegal immigration.

Le Pen described the outcome as "a political earthquake and a radical transformation of the landscape" that would increase the importance of his supporters.

Death toll rises

BEIRUT, April 25, (Reuters): The death toll from a car bomb in the north Lebanese port of Tripoli rose to at least 60 as the Syrian-held town observed a strike today to mourn its dead.

Threats will not change US policy

WASHINGTON, April 25, (Agencies): The White House said yesterday US policy would not be affected by "terrorist threats" to kill American hostages in Lebanon.

A White House spokesman said he was aware of press reports from Lebanon that the captors of two American hostages had threatened to kill them if there were any more US attacks on Iraq in the Gulf.

While not confirming that the White House had been officially informed of the threats, the spokesman, Roman Popadiuk, said in a prepared statement read over the telephone.

Safety

"We hold the kidnappers responsible for the safety of all the hostages. We call for the prompt and safe release of all the hostages and our policy will not be affected by terrorist threats."

The latest threat was delivered by the pro-Iranian Revolutionary Justice Organisation (RJO) to an international news organisation in Beirut.

It came a day after US officials said the Reagan administration might expand protection in the Gulf to neutral ships not flying the American flag, and less than a week after the US Navy sank or disabled six Iranian war vessels.

"The American attacks in the Gulf will not pass without punishment," said the statement by the RJO, which holds Americans Joseph James Cicippio and Edward Austin Tracy.

"Any new attack under any pretext and no matter what the reasons, will lead to the execution of Edward Tracy first and then Cicippio," the undated statement said.

Details

Defence Secretary Frank Carlucci said yesterday that the United States is considering sending Coast Guard vessels to the Gulf to augment the considerable US Navy fleet already in the tense region.

The Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Admiral William Crowe, said the plan was under study, but neither would discuss details of this or another plan to widen US Navy protection to neutral ships not flying the American flag.

Crowe and Carlucci spoke in separate television interviews as Iran, apparently ignoring a warning from President Reagan, attacked another ship in the Gulf.

On Sunday the New York Times reported the Pentagon was thinking of adding Coast Guard vessels to the 28-ship US fleet in the Gulf region. Asked about the report, Crowe said: "We are considering that kind of thing. The Coast Guard has a kind of patrol boat that is appropriate for those kinds of operations."

Questioned about the same report, Carlucci said: "That is under study, yes sir. They (the Coast Guard) have somewhat smaller ships which have a better patrolling capability to free our larger ships for other missions..."

In another development, diplomatic sources in the Afghan capital of Kabul said the US embassy was tightening security, including evacuating American staff members after intelligence reports the mission may be under threat from Iran.

He also warned Kuwait.

Iran has fired long-range missiles into Kuwait and Iranian gunboats last month hit a military post on Kuwait's Bubiyan island, wounding two soldiers.

Velayati handed Assad a letter from Iranian President Ali Khamenei during the two-hour meeting. But he would not elaborate on its contents. Later he returned to Tehran.

Expanded US protection in the Gulf favoured

A KUWAITI oil official has said he favoured a plan being debated in Washington to extend US naval protection in the Gulf to any neutral vessel under attack.

Saad Matouq, fleet manager (west) at the Kuwait Oil Tanker Company (KOTC), said this would help to deter raids on Gulf shipping stemming from the Iran-Iraq war.

Protection

"There are a lot of ships in the area without any protection... If some sort of Navy will protect them then definitely this will give a chance for everyone to resume (safe) passage," he said.

KOTC put half its 22-tanker fleet under the American flag last year to obtain US protection from Iranian attacks.

US warships in the Gulf now have orders to defend only ships

Iran vows to retaliate

DAMASCUS, April 25, (Agencies): Iran's Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati says his country will retaliate for any future move by the US fleet in the Gulf, the state-run Syrian news agency Sana reported yesterday.

"Iran will not stay idle... We will retaliate against any American move... Iran has the power to defend itself," Velayati told a news conference late yesterday at the end of a two-day visit to Damascus.

He rebutted what he called "US allegations" that Iran was planting mines in the Gulf waters.

Situation

"These allegations are mere pretexts to justify the American intervention in the Gulf and designed to give support to the Iraqi regime," Velayati said.

He said Iran does not advocate missile strikes at cities in the 7-1/2-year-old Gulf war but warned that "if the Iraqi regime persists with the war of the cities we will strike back."

During his visit Velayati met with Syrian President Hafez Assad and Foreign Minister Farouk Al Sharaa. Sana said the talks focused on the "situation in the Gulf in the wake of the American aggressions, the uprising in the Israeli-occupied territories, and other issues of mutual interest."

Arafat meets Assad to heal 5-year-old rift

DAMASCUS, April 25, (Agencies): PLO chief Yasser Arafat, his leadership beset by the assassination of his deputy, met with Syrian President Hafez Al Assad, presidential spokesman Jibril Kourieh said.

The meeting, only the second time the two key Arab leaders have come face-to-face since 1983, came amid efforts to end a bloody five-year-old feud that has bedevilled the Arab world.

Khourieh said the meeting began at 5 pm (1400 GMT) at Assad's palace.

The PLO leader was accompanied by Farouk Kaddoumi, who also heads the PLO's political department and Arafat's No.2, Salah Khalaf, the spokesman said.

Five other members of the central committee of Fatah, the PLO's main component, also attended: Hani Al Hassan, Rafiq Al Natsheh, Hayel Abdul Hamid, Salim Al Zaanoun and Mohammed Rafeb Ghoneim, Khourieh noted.

Syrian Foreign Minister Farouk Al Sharaa accompanied Assad, the spokesman added.

Arafat earlier met with his top aides to prepare for the crucial session with Assad.

George Habash, head of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, said after the meeting of the PLO executives: "We discussed the central issues which Arafat is going to raise with Syrian President."

Chance

Habash said the Palestinian leadership was determined "to invest this opportunity" to reconcile Arafat with members of the rebel faction "because it is a rare chance to back the uprising in the (Israeli-occupied) territories and resume relations between the PLO and Syria."

"A meeting between Arafat and the Palestine National Salvation Front is possible," Habash said, referring to the Syrian-backed hardline coalition of six Palestinian factions formed in 1985 to oppose Arafat's policies.

Role

Palestinian officials described Arafat's return to Syria, as the opening of a new chapter in relations between Syria and the PLO which he heads.

Assad today met Colonei Mustafa Al Kharoubi, a member of Libya's Revolutionary Council who accompanied Arafat aboard the private Libyan jet from Tripoli yesterday after a PLO-Libyan reconciliation last week.

Arab diplomats said Libyan leader Muammar Khaddafi and Algerian President Chadli Benjedid played a major role in paving the way for PLO-Syrian reconciliation.

A powerful delegation of Arafat's PLO mainstream Fatah group held successful talks with Syrian Vice-President Abdel Halim Khaddam to prepare for the Arafat-Assad meeting.

Palestinian officials said all anti-Arafat groups except Abu Musa's, held talks with the PLO leader's Fatah delegation.

A firm PLO-Syrian rapprochement could lead to a merger of the majority of PLO factions, they said.

Khaddam stressed the need for PLO unity when he met representatives of the Damascus-based National Salvation Front grouping five hardline Palestinian organisations previously opposed to Arafat, they added.

The Syrian move to normalise relations with Arafat was based on a clear rejection of US Middle East peace moves, a Syrian official said.

Curfew clamped on West Bank town

OCCUPIED JERUSALEM, April 25, (AP): Soldiers clamped a curfew on a Palestinian town in the occupied territories today while police kept a watchful eye on a row of Arab-owned shops in Jerusalem in an attempt to break a strike orchestrated by underground PLO leaders.

Elsewhere in the disputed territories, troops lifted curfew restrictions from two refugee camps in the Gaza Strip, permitting thousands of Palestinians to return to their jobs in Israel.

The Army said the eased restrictions followed a two-day lull in a 19-week-old uprising against Israeli occupation in which 173 Palestinians and two Israelis have died, according to UN figures.

Troops, however, imposed a nighttime curfew in the northern West Bank town of Kalkilya after disturbances yesterday in which there were no injuries, a military spokesman said.

Rebellion

In the main cities of Nablus, Ramallah, Hebron and Bethlehem, most merchants kept their doors shut in keeping with a five-month long morning commercial strike which has been part of the rebellion against 21 years of Israeli rule.

In Jerusalem, dozens of police braced to break the strike by staging a symbolic show of force outside 25 grocery and hardware shops and bakeries, after their owners defied military orders to open their doors yesterday.

Israeli radio stations said the police would prevent the shopkeepers from opening in the afternoon, which is when the PLO permits them to open.

In a related development, Foreign Minister Shimon Peres' Labour Party has hardened its election platform by promising voters a final say over any Middle East peace settlement.

The change which was part of a document released today was seen as a way of wooing voters away from the right-wing Likud bloc headed by Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir.

Compromise

Labour has in the past called for a territorial compromise with Jordan while the Likud objects to conceding any of the occupied lands.

Figures released by the Defence Ministry indicated the Army has spent at least $162 million on quelling the 19-week-old Arab uprising.

Defence Minister Yitzhak Rabin yesterday told the cabinet that 1,700 Palestinians, more than one-third of the 4,900 arrested since Dec 9, were being held without trial for up to six months.

Rabin also said the Justice Ministry was hampering Army efforts to deport more Palestinian agitators, Israel media said. Since Dec 9, Israel has deported 20 Palestinians to Lebanon and ordered at least four others expelled.

Marcos: hopes

Aquino won't allow Marcos to return

MANILA, April 25, (AP): President Corason Aquino said yesterday she has no intention of allowing former President Ferdinand Marcos to return to the country.

"I just want our people to know and to reassure them that I will never do anything that will go against the interests of the Filipino people," Aquino said during her weekly radio programme "ask the President."

She was responding to two women who said they were disappointed that she had sent emissaries early this year to meet with Marcos, who has been living in Hawaii since his ouster in February 1986.

One of the women said she was on the verge of disillusionment with Aquino because of reports that government representatives were negotiating with Marcos for his possible return. Aquino's spokesmen had earlier denied the reports.

Marcos told reporters in Honolulu last week that negotiations with Aquino's government were continuing and he was told he could return in two months to act as a government adviser.

Aquino said she sent two of her relatives to meet with Marcos last January and February because she had heard his health was "really deteriorating very fast" and that he had a message for her.

"My directions to my relatives... were very clear — just to listen to what Mr Marcos had to say," Aquino said. "Never did I say that he could come back or that I wanted him to advise me and help me (find) the solutions to our problems."

Rajiv vows to implement socialism

NEW DELHI, April 25, (AP): Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi on Sunday pledged to implement socialism in India said it is his Congress Party that alone can govern the country.

"We will launch a battle against poverty and unemployment. We shall take a pledge to implement the socialist pattern of society," Rajiv was quoted as saying by the United News of India at his party's annual conference.

The two-day conference ended in the south Indian town of Maraimalai, 45 kilometres (28 miles) south of Madras City in Tamil Nadu state.

State-owned television said 100,000 delegates attended the conference.

In political resolutions adopted at the conference, Congress leaders said their party was the only one that can ensure the unity of India and see that the nation of 800 million people prospers.

Conference speakers blasted India's opposition parties and said their efforts to unite were aimed at grabbing political powers.

Ershad opens new parliament

Bombs rock Bangladesh capital

DHAKA, April 25, (Reuters): Five home-made bombs exploded in the Bangladesh capital today at the start of an eight-hour, opposition-led general strike aimed at disrupting the opening of parliament.

No injuries were reported from the bombs, which police said were made of metal fragments and explosives and set off in the Magbazar area.

Five thousand military police patrolled Dhaka in response to the strike call by 21 opposition parties.

Shops, offices and banks were shuttered during the strike. All private cars and commuters stayed off the streets. But government buses and a large number of Dhaka's 100,000 cycle rickshaws moved normally.

Officials said the strike did not disrupt airlines, trains or ferry services.

Crisis

President Hosain Mohammad Ershad denounced the opposition's series of strikes in his address opening the new parliament.

"The undeclared objective of unending hartals (strikes) soon after the devastating floods was to cause famine... which their sponsors believe would create crisis for the government and inevitably lead to transfer of power."

"As a cumulative effect of all these the GDP (gross domestic product) growth in the current financial year is expected to be around 2.6 per cent (down from a 5.1 per cent target)," he said.

The house press gallery was empty for his speech as local journalists boycotted the session demanding more press freedom and withdrawal of a ban on some newspapers.

Security

Dhaka metropolitan police chief Nasrullah Khan ordered that anyone entering a three-mile (five km) radius of the parliament building would need a pass. He also banned movement of vehicles carrying arms and explosives in the area.

The 21 parties dub the new parliament as "fake" because they say it emerged through a rigged election on March 3. They had boycotted the election and asked Ershad to step down. They want him to hand over power to a caretaker government that would call fresh elections.

Campaign

The balloting was boycotted by the mainstream opposition parties, which have been sponsoring strikes and rallies since last Nov 10 in an effort to oust Ershad. The opposition contends that no elections can be run fairly while he remains in office.

There are 25 independent members of parliament, and the remaining 24 seats are shared by smaller opposition parties.

The government asked all parliament members and senior officials to stay in hostels adjacent to the parliament building in order to avoid being stranded during the strike.

Several thousand riot police and paramilitary troops were stationed around the parliament complex in the city's northern district to enforce a ban on street protests within two kilometres of the sprawling complex.

A parliament official said many legislators stayed in Dhaka overnight, either inside the parliament complex or in nearby houses so they could walk down to the session in spite of the strike.

Ershad's Jatiya Party won 251 of the 300 seats in the election March 3.

Opposition leaders claim that only 4.8 million of the country's 48 million voters exercised their franchise in the March polls.

In separate press statements, the main opposition leaders said today they would continue their campaign until the government was thrown out of power.

"We will not stop our movement till this autocratic regime is toppled," said Khaleda Zia, who leads the Bangladesh Nationalist Party and a seven-party opposition alliance.

Sheikh Hasina said: "This parliament has not been elected by the people, and hence it has no locus stand to touch the constitution or pass any bills."

Hasina leads the Awami League and an eight-party alliance.

Ershad has said he plans to introduce a bill in parliament to amend the constitution and declare Islam as the state religion.

On Saturday more than 1,000 women, mostly college teachers, marched through the Dhaka streets to protest the proposal.

Nearly 90 per cent of Bangladesh's citizens are Muslim, but the government has traditionally been secular.

Mini-ambassadors at United Nations

UNITED NATIONS, April 25, (Xinhua): About 1,500 children from different countries gathered yesterday at the United Nations headquarters in New York for a "special general assembly" to celebrate the World Children's Day, calling in one voice for world peace.

The children, in their most elegant and beautiful national costumes, started the celebration with the release of 3,000 colourful balloons, a symbol of their common aspiration for peace and freedom.

Sunday was the third anniversary of the World Children's Day which was founded in 1986 by two students from New York, who wrote a letter addressed to the "kids of the world" inviting them to come together for a day with the common objective of peace.

Ambassadors

Since then, every fourth Sunday of April, children around the world will get together at the United Nations headquarters to celebrate the day.

Yesterday, all the children became the symbolic ambassadors of their nations. When they were led into the General Assembly hall.

The spirit was one of joy and laughter. Each of them was given the opportunity to sit in their ambassador's chair, symbolising the legacy attached to future generations.

"We want to call attention to the world that the children will be inheriting the world. They want to live in peace," said Nancy Bennet, director of the development and public relations of the World Children's Day Foundation (WCD), which along with the UN Children's Fund (Unicef) organised the celebrations.

James Ochieng, a 12-year-old boy from Kenya who was among about 40 children taking the floor, said that he is really glad to be here to celebrate the World Children's Day, because "it gives all the children a chance to express their feelings about world peace."

Yuan Yin, an eight-year-old girl from China, said that if she were a teacher, she would teach her students to "love peace and do every thing for peace."

Italian restaurant opens in China

BEIJING, April 25, (AP): The first Italian restaurant in China, Toula-Beijing of the Milan-based Toula group, opens today in a Beijing hotel.

Tong Hualing, general manager of the Beijing International Hotel, said at a news conference that the Chinese chefs have been trained in Italy and Toula has sent a manager and chef to oversee operations.

He said 20 per cent of the food would be imported from Italy with the remainder coming from China.

Mayor's aide slain

MANILA, April 25, (AP): Two men wearing jogging clothes shot dead a bodyguard of the mayor of suburban Makati as he drank coffee outside his home, police said.

Police quoted witnesses as saying the assailants shouted, "don't interfere, we're the NPA," referring to the Communist New People's Army, before the attack yesterday. But officials said they were uncertain whether they were actually rebels.

Elephants in search of beer

GAUHATI, India, April 25, (UPI): Drunk elephants searching for rice beer rampaged throughout a remote settlement in northeastern India, killing five people, injuring 12 others and forcing thousands of terrified villagers to flee, an official said yesterday.

"People should stop making this liquor as elephants are drawn by the smell," advised Deb Roy, the state's forestry director, after the Saturday night stampede through Behali village, 1,140 miles east of New Delhi in Assam state.

He said the fumes of "lao pani," an alcoholic beverage made from rice local Hindus usually drew after the first harvest, lured 13 pachyderms into the settlement of more than 2,000 inhabitants on the edge of a state forest.

Proceeded

The elephants proceeded to imbibe the brew, and after consuming several large vats, began searching for more, he said.

Roy said villagers used firecrackers and flaming torches to try and scare away the hefty creatures but the tactics only infuriated the beasts, who rampaged through the village.

Five people — including three women — were crushed to death, and 12 other villagers were injured in the stampede, which also destroyed some 100 thatched houses, Roy said.

Abandoned infants

BEIJING, April 25, (Reuters): Railway authorities have opened an official register of abandoned babies after 38 infants were found in Beijing's main train station last year, the newspaper Life News said today.

It said most of the babies found by station staff were blind, deformed or retarded and were believed to have been left by peasant parents who hoped the children would be well brought up in the relatively affluent capital.

Last week, another Chinese newspaper said 25 homeless beggars had died of cold, hunger or illness in a 15-month period in the waiting rooms of Beijing's second largest railway station, in a rare official report on destitution in the capital.

Yemens to trim guards

ABU DHABI, April 25, (Reuters): The leaders of North and South Yemen have agreed to reduce the number of troops guarding their common frontier, South Yemeni leader Ali Salem Al-Baidh said.

"We have agreed to reduce the two sides' troops at the borders in a bid to forestall any confrontation which we totally reject," Baidh told the Abu Dhabi newspaper Al Ittihad.

In the interview published today, Baidh said they were considering jointly exploiting oil deposits on the border.

Kanak woman shot dead

NOUMEA, April 25, (Reuters): A young Kanak woman was shot dead today, hours after French gendarmes were ordered to show no mercy to gunmen in the French-ruled South Pacific territory of New Caledonia.

Leopold Jorodier, a Kanak separatist leader, said he considered the Paris government had "declared colonial war" with its announcement that gendarmes would fire back if shot at.

The Melanesian teenager was the first Kanak to die this year in an incident involving police.

Slow Soviet economic growth might undermine Gorbachev

WASHINGTON, April 25, (Reuters): The Soviet Union's drive to modernise its economy encountered trouble in 1987 that could undercut the political strength of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, a US intelligence study released yesterday said.

"Familiar problems with poor weather and transportation bottlenecks were compounded by the disruptions caused by the introduction of economic reforms, with the result that Soviet gross national product grew by less than one per cent last year," it said.

Perestroika

The study was prepared for the joint economic committee of Congress by the Central Intelligence Agency and the Defence Intelligence Agency. It described the Soviet economy as stagnant in 1987 and said there were shortages of consumer goods and falling output.

Since coming to power three years ago, Gorbachev has tried to revive the economy through a programme known as perestroika — a term describing tighter economic discipline, industrial modernisation and economic reform — but some elements have backfired, the study suggested.

It said a quality-control programme introduced in 1,500 industrial enterprises was particularly disruptive because wage reform, reductions in ministerial staffs and financial reforms had complicated managers' jobs.

Though Soviet military programme seemed to be on track so far, "the real loser in 1987 appeared to be the consumer who — three years into Gorbachev's economic programme — has seen almost no increase in his standard of living," the study said.

Continuing weak economic growth could cause rising tension within Soviet society and the leadership and possibly lead to widespread discontent.

"Bureaucrats will become increasingly frustrated by loss of privileges and status and by demands that they show greater initiative," the study said.

"Military leaders are likely to become more and more uneasy if benefits from the industrial modernisation fail to materialise."

Difficult

The study said Gorbachev appeared to have no set timetable for achieving signs of progress, but "failure to head off these tensions would, at a minimum, make it more difficult to pursue his economic programme vigorously and could, ultimately, call into question his strong political base at home."

Soviet agricultural output fell three per cent last year from 1986 levels, while the critical machine-building sector showed no increase in output, the study said.

It said that, on a positive note, energy production was up in 1987 so Moscow was able to boost its hard currency earnings by increasing fuel exports to Western countries.

Mayor's aide slain

MANILA, April 25, (AP): Two men wearing jogging clothes shot dead a bodyguard of the mayor of suburban Makati as he drank coffee outside his home, police said.

Elephants in search of beer

GAUHATI, India, April 25, (UPI): Drunk elephants searching for rice beer rampaged throughout a remote settlement in northeastern India, killing five people, injuring 12 others and forcing thousands of terrified villagers to flee, an official said yesterday.

"People should stop making this liquor as elephants are drawn by the smell," advised Deb Roy, the state's forestry director, after the Saturday night stampede through Behali village, 1,140 miles east of New Delhi in Assam state.

He said the fumes of "lao pani," an alcoholic beverage made from rice local Hindus usually drew after the first harvest, lured 13 pachyderms into the settlement of more than 2,000 inhabitants on the edge of a state forest.

Proceeded

The elephants proceeded to imbibe the brew, and after consuming several large vats, began searching for more, he said.

Roy said villagers used firecrackers and flaming torches to try and scare away the hefty creatures but the tactics only infuriated the beasts, who rampaged through the village.

Five people — including three women — were crushed to death, and 12 other villagers were injured in the stampede, which also destroyed some 100 thatched houses, Roy said.

Abandoned infants

BEIJING, April 25, (Reuters): Railway authorities have opened an official register of abandoned babies after 38 infants were found in Beijing's main train station last year, the newspaper Life News said today.

It said most of the babies found by station staff were blind, deformed or retarded and were believed to have been left by peasant parents who hoped the children would be well brought up in the relatively affluent capital.

Last week, another Chinese newspaper said 25 homeless beggars had died of cold, hunger or illness in a 15-month period in the waiting rooms of Beijing's second largest railway station, in a rare official report on destitution in the capital.

In the interview published today, Baidh said they were considering jointly exploiting oil deposits on the border.

Dhahar situation under control: Awadi

Probe into house collapse

KUWAIT'S Minister of Planning, Abdul Rahman Al Awadi said in a press conference yesterday that the government was investigating the collapse of a house in the Dhahar area which resulted from "geological factors." He added, "The situation in Dhahar is under control."

The Chief Engineer of the Dhahar Housing Project Jassem Al Khulaifi said that a cave-in in the area had resulted in 13 houses being vacated as a precautionary measure. A hole, measuring 31 and a half metres deep and 20 metres wide, is being filled with sand and 300 cubic metres of concrete.

He said that the soil is being tested and every effort was being made to prevent further cave-ins. One citizen who has been relocated in the Sabah Al Salem area said that the move has been very inconvenient for him. He added that the cave in began as a small hole and then gradually kept getting bigger.

The Dhahar Housing Project consists of 2,541 houses with a population of 20,000. It has been plagued with housing problems since it was built in 1985, and a public relations office has been opened to respond to complaints made by citizens in the project.

A local newspaper reported that the hole which swallowed the car had become bigger, reaching a depth of 30 metres and a width of 15 metres. The hole was likely to engulf the adjacent substation if it became larger, the newspaper said.

The owner of the house of the collapsed diwaniya said that this was the second time the diwaniya had collapsed. He said he had notified the National Housing Authority (NHA) three months ago about cracks in the house but there had been no response.

He believed that other houses would also collapse.

Security fence
State Minister for Housing Affairs Nasser Al Roudhan, State Minister for Municipal Affairs Mohammed Al Rifai, Communications Minister Abdullah Al Sharhan, Justice Minister Dhari Al Othman, NHA director general Dr Ibrahim Al Shaheen, and senior officials of the NHA, Interior Ministry and Fire Department, rushed to the spot, held a meeting and decided to have the houses in the area evacuated at once.

Al Roudhan said NHA staff noticed the big hole that had swallowed the car and had put up a security fence around the hole to protect people. He added that a diwaniya sank into the ground in the same area and the authorities evacuated the houses as a precaution.

He said the NHA provided flats for the house owners as a temporary measure until tests were carried out on the soil of the area.

A team from the Kuwait Institute for Scientific Research and Kuwait University studied the matter and gave explanations for the situation.

The newspaper also reported that the Electricity and Water Ministry studied the problem of underground water in Zahr area. The report said the water may cause the collapse of houses in the area.

Distribution of books

THE Undersecretary of the Education Ministry, Abdul Rahman Al Khudari, has instructed the schools curriculum and books department to study the ministry's needs in books in the light of statistics prepared by the planning department, the estimates of the educational

He also instructed the supplies and stores department to distribute books according to the curriculum to schools under the supervision of the educational areas.

He thanked the staff for the coverage of the hijacking during the 16 days.

He said the crisis enabled the staff to take part in efforts to support the national unity of Kuwait which was the strongest weapon to face challenges and crises.

Sheikh Jaber pointed out that several international news agencies and newspaper admired the Kuwaiti media for the excellent coverage of the crisis.

Students union hosts reception

LONDON, April 25, (Kuna): The Union of Kuwaiti Students — UK branch — hosted a reception party here last evening to observe the happy ending of the hijack ordeal.

The reception was attended by Kuwaiti ambassador here Ghazi Al Rayess and other Kuwaiti diplomats in addition to students from all over the UK.

The union praised the government of Kuwait for its firm position not to meet the demands of the hijackers topped by their request that 17 prisoners in Kuwait be released.

The 17 prisoners requested for release, the union said, are criminals who undertook a violent operation against the embassies of the US and France.

Extension of work hours discussed

TAREQ Al Abdul Jader, the Assistant Undersecretary for Technical Affairs at Kuwait's Public Health Ministry, presided over a meeting of senior ministry officials and health centre directors to discuss the possibility of a one-hour extension to the health centres' work hours.

Meanwhile, Health Ministry sources said the ministry would begin outlining doctors' job descriptions, which would include clinical, supervisory and administrative positions.

Kuwait's handling of hijack ordeal lauded

BAGHDAD, April 25, (Kuna): A leading Iraqi media expert was today highly appreciative of the handling of the Kuwaiti government and people and the media of the 16-day ordeal of the hijacked Kuwaiti airliner which ended in the safe return of the passengers and crew.

The Kuwaitis have shown beyond any doubt that "the will and determination of a people have nothing to do with the size of population of the country but are tied to the values of the Arabs everywhere," Director General of the Iraqi News Agency Saad Al Bazzaz told Kuna.

The government and people of Kuwait have flatly and firmly refused to bow to any form of blackmail or pressure despite the mean methods used by the hijackers throughout the "voyage of terror" which lasted 16 days," he said in an interview with Kuna.

In this connection, Al Bazzaz lauded the attitude of the Kuwaiti media not only in treating the developments of the hijacking but in its overall handling of the pan-Arab issues which he described as "mature."

Kuwait's embassies get more congratulatory cables

KUWAIT'S embassies in various countries are still receiving congratulatory cables on the great victory achieved by the release of the hostages on the hijacked KAC jetliner.

In Baghdad, the embassy was visited by ambassadors and other officials of GCC states and other countries. The visitors offered their congratulations and praised Kuwait for its firm stand against the hijacking.

In Khartoum, and Rabat the embassies received cables and telephone calls. In Manama, the embassy received congratulations on the release of the passengers. In Bonn, the embassy received telexes and cables of congratulations on the release of the hostages.

The President of Brazil expressed his congratulations on the happy outcome to the hijacking of the KAC jetliner.

Bazzaz said that history will remember the honourable stand of Kuwaiti media in its treatment of the Arab causes and its full dedication to the honour and wellbeing of the Arab nation against all challenges.

The Iraqi media expert concluded calling for an Arab media capable of upholding the Arab values at the present critical juncture of the history of the Arab nation as a pre-requisite to countering invaders and ambition-seekers.

KUWAIT PRESS DIGEST

Arabs urged to close ranks

KUWAITI newspaper Al Rai Al Aam urged Arabs to close ranks in the face of superpower interest-sharing designs in the region.

The daily in a front-page editorial said that the two superpowers took the advantage of the tensions in the region and managed to fuel the unending wars and conflicts for their own interests.

The paper noted that those big powers ignite the tensions and wars, then launch initiatives and peace plans claiming that they are seriously trying to end those conflicts.

Al Rai Al Aam lamented that some Arabs still believe such initiatives and give concessions which run counter to their interests.

Shevardnadze to visit Middle East soon

SOVIET Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze will visit the Middle East shortly following the American-Soviet summit which will be held next month in Moscow, according to a press report here on Sunday.

Al Seyassah, quoting sources in the Soviet foreign ministry, added that Shevardnadze's tour to the region includes Syria and Jordan and possibly Kuwait.

Other diplomatic sources in the Soviet foreign ministry told the Kuwaiti paper that a headway toward breaking the stalemate in the complex Mideast issue of the Arab-Israeli conflict and the Gulf war could pave the way for a possible visit to the region by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

Regarding Shevardnadze's tour to the region, Al Seyassah learnt that it will centre on the Iraq-Iran war. It noted that Moscow believes that any settlement to the Gulf conflict should be based on full respect of the two countries' rights and their vital interests.

According to the daily, several Soviet officials believe that Israel is very close to the Iraq-Iran conflict, and it found a gap in this war that enabled it to obstruct the mediation efforts aiming at ending the bloody conflict.

Three quality control laboratories in operation

THE controller at the quality control office of the Commerce and Industry Ministry, Mrs. Sheikhha Rashed Al Bader, said yesterday that three of six laboratories were operational.

She said that building material chemicals and dyes were tested at the laboratories for conformity with standard specifications. She said that these standard measures used by the technicians at these labs were essential precautionary measures aimed at controlling imports and exports with a view to protecting the national economy.

She said that the functions of the quality control labs included the unification of standard quality control specifications for all commercial and industrial sectors in the country, and related services.

She said that other functions of the labs included the testing of raw materials, medium substances, products and imported items to ensure their conformity with local specifications for quality control purposes, and included the issue of certificates confirming compliance with standard quality control specifications.

Flexibility

She added that two types of tests were performed on samples at these laboratories, and included physical tests of concrete, for example, to establish its basic physical properties including the safety factor, and chemical tests to establish the weight of the substance or item after burning and also to determine the chemical elements.

She said certain specifications were treated with some amount of flexibility, with the sole exception of those on foodstuffs, which were compulsory and made and supervised by the Health Ministry and Kuwait Municipality.

She pointed out that the office was the only authority for issuing standard specifications in the country, and that there was cooperation between the office and the quality control centre at the Kuwait Institute for Scientific Research, the Public Works Ministry and laboratories belonging to other service ministries.

She said that the building material lab performed physical tests aimed at ensuring the compatibility of building material with standard Kuwaiti specifications of Portland concrete and related types, concrete blocks, tiles, sand, aggregate, limestone, insulation material, plastics and iron.

Analysis

She said that the chemical lab performed spectrometric analysis of material to establish its chemical components, determined the percentage of soluble minerals, estimated the moisture content and other tests.

She also said that the dyes lab performed various tests of a chemical and physical nature on dyes, while the textile lab was concerned with establishing the texture composition of thread, cotton percentage ratio of other synthetic material in cloth and materials, and included stress and pressure tests.

He said that his country condemned this dastardly act which resulted in the loss of two innocent lives adding that Pakistan's prayers and sympathies were with the bereaved families.

11,016 kilos of spoiled foodstuffs destroyed

ABDULLA Al Shemmari, the Director of the Imported Foodstuffs Department at Kuwait Municipality, said that 317,223 kilos of foodstuffs had been re-exported last month. He added that 11,016 kilos of spoiled foodstuffs had been destroyed during the same period.

Al Shemmari explained that frozen meat imports are checked by the customs department and then municipality officials test the meat to determine whether it meets certain specifications as to type of meat, country of origin, date of packing and expiration and Islamic method of slaughtering.

He said the department inspectors check foodstuffs at stores, companies, supermarkets, hotels, restaurants and groceries. Inspectors regularly take samples of foodstuffs for laboratory testing at the Health Ministry.

Prices of consumer goods soar

THE price of different consumer goods were increased at the start of the holy month of Ramadan, market sources told Al Seyassah newspaper.

An official of the Kuwait Livestock Company, Zakaria Ibrahim, said that frozen meat prices ranged between 500 fils and 750 fils per kilogram. He told the newspaper that the company's prices were fixed and competitive. He said that packed beef prices ranged between KD1 and KD3, adding that most of this beef was imported from Germany and Holland.

Demand

A shop supervisor, Abu Riadh, said sales last week were better than before, adding that the market had witnessed an increased demand for beef.

A salesman at the Turkish Meat Exhibition, Mohammed Mahmoud, said the last season was better than the current one. He said Australian mutton prices were between 600 fils and 650 fils per kilogram while Turkish meat was fixed at 750 fils. He expected sales to rise by 50 per cent during the first week of Ramadan.

The newspaper also interviewed a number of people in the foodstuff business.

Jaber Hassan Othman said that the sales this year had fallen compared to the last year, and attributed this to the spread of wholesale markets. He said that the demand for fruit juices and frozen chicken had increased, while the demand for canned goods had fallen because people preferred fresh food during Ramadan.

A salesman in the Vegetable Market, Karam Ali, said that prices and sales had doubled in the vegetable market. He added that demand for dates had risen during Ramadan.

Flooded

Another salesman said that sales had increased by 20 per cent in general but prices had increased by 60 per cent. He said the market was flooded with bananas, tomatoes, apricots, apples and strawberries, imported mostly from the Philippines and Holland.

A merchant, Hassan Sadiqi, said the market had recovered during the past few days, and attributed this to the abundance of different vegetables in the market.

A customer, Ahmed Jaddallah, said the prices had increased suddenly, adding that potato prices had risen by 50 per cent.

Another customer, Mohammad Al Rakkad, complained of the leap in prices during Ramadan. He said a committee should be formed to limit price increases.

Hassan Al Zuabi said prices had risen during the past two days. He said a carton of fruit juice had risen from KD5 to KD6.

Egyptian military strategist sees beginning of end of war

AN Egyptian military strategist was quoted yesterday as affirming that the recent escalation in the Iraq-Iran war could be the beginning of the end of the Gulf war, especially that Iraq has recaptured the Faw peninsula.

Head of Egypt's Nasser Strategy and National Security Academy, Dr. Ahmed Shouqi was quoted by a Kuwaiti daily as saying that the recapture of Faw and missiles raids on the Iranian cities were apparently aimed at forcing Iran to respond favourably to the peace calls and accept a negotiated settlement of the war.

The expert, who made the remarks in Cairo added that after Iraq tried and failed to make Iran accept the Security Council ceasefire call, as well as international mediations, it restored to tougher military actions to make clear to Iran that it has no hope of winning the war militarily.

Shouqi also noted that the recapture of Faw peninsula will ease Iranian pressure on Kuwait as the peninsula acted as a dividing line between Kuwait and Iran.

Frenchman to play Arab music

A FRENCHMAN will play Arab music "with the spirit of the Arabs" at a concert in Kuwait. The Frenchman, Julien Weiss, is a member of Al Kindi music quartet, which is to give a recital on Sunday, May 1, at the Meridien Hotel.

The Al Kindi comprises Weiss (qanoun), Larbi Ouechni (kaman), Mohammad Saada (flute) and Adel Shamseddine (riqq). Together they'll alternate between French baroque and Arab classical music, presenting a combination of 14th and 15th century classical music and Arab-Islamic classics from Turkey, Egypt, Tunisia, Morocco, Syria and Iraq.

Frenchman Julien Weiss, in a recent interview, talked about his love for Arab music, which he has cultivated over the years. "A musician must acquire a spirit for playing Arab music; requiring years of training," he said.

Weiss first listened to Arab music when he had to prepare for a concert at the Egyptian Cultural Centre in Paris. "I listened to some Arab music and was inspired by it," he said. After examining several musical instruments, he selected the qanoun.

Challenge
The qanoun, a string instrument, was invented by Arabi and has since been improved by later musicians. The number of strings have been increased and its shape has changed considerably since it was first invented. Weiss chose the qanoun "because it is the most interesting, diverse and challenging musical instrument."

A professional guitarist,

Weiss' goal was to master the qanoun. This, it turned out, was a tough job. Thus, began his frequent trips to such countries as Egypt, learning to "play qanoun as the Arabs play."

In Cairo, he joined the Academy of Art and studied under professor Kamal Abdullah. He also bought his first qanoun.

After he completed studies, he joined a group of Arab musicians. Weiss found he could not make much headway as he was "working on the qanoun as I would have handled the guitar."

He explains: "I was playing an Arab instrument but applying Western techniques. It just didn't work." Weiss did not give up. He continued studying music first under the popular Lebanese qanoun player Elia Al Ashkar and then played for four years recorded music for the singer Shari Al Alawi.

His association with Al

Alawi gave him immense confidence. During those four years, he matured as a performer, giving several concerts in French-speaking areas in the Lebanon.

Repertoire

Restless, Weiss needed a change. "I felt the need to expand my musical repertoire," he said. So, he went to Turkey, where he learned the finer points of Turkish-Islamic music.

"I had to understand the nuances, similarities and differences between different types of Islamic music," he said.

By this time, Weiss was totally immersed in Arab music. He also became an Arabist, reading "everything that I could, about the Arab world." He read Arabic history, philosophy and the history of music.

"Culture is not inborn. It can be cultivated by study and practice," he said. Weiss has often been criticised by some for "playing an Arab musical instrument." Others encourage him in his endeavour. But his greatest reward, it seems, comes from being one with the instrument he is playing.

"I want to play the qanoun like the Arabs," he says. Weiss, today, is an established musician performing in several Arab and European countries.

Weiss, and the other members of the Al Kindi quartet, are currently touring the Middle East. After their Kuwait concert, they will perform in Iraq, Jordan and Syria.

At the Kuwait concert they will play troubadours and music written by Guillaume de Machaut, Binchois, Dufay and Thomas Crecquillon.

Their concert has been organised by the Cultural Centre, French Embassy, in Kuwait.

GCC promotes artists

THE GCC's culture committee has decided to encourage art and artists. This was announced after a recent meeting held in Kuwait. The announcement said an art exhibition is to be held every two years to promote art in the region. The first exhibition will be held in January next year. Each Gulf state will display 20 paintings.

The committee will present gold, silver and bronze awards to the best entry; souvenir shields will be distributed to all participating countries.

The third meeting of the Culture Committee, affiliated to the GCC, was recently held in Kuwait. It was chaired by Sulaiman Al Askari, acting secretary-general of Kuwait's National Council for Culture, Arts and Letters. Officials from Saudi Arabia, UAE, Qatar, Bahrain and Oman also attended the meeting.

The participants decided to hold a "seminar on music and singing" in Bahrain in October this year. A seminar on children's literature will be hosted by Qatar later this year. (Kuna)

Delightful Gala Concert

THE New English School (NES) on Sunday presented their annual Gala Concert featuring a selection of classical music. Over 50 students, including the band and the Senior Choir, took part in the two-and-a-half hour show.

The highlight of the evening was the performance of Gilbert and Sullivan's Pirates of Penzance. The principals in this musical were Krystoff Overkowitz, Seema Gaur, Martin Kirk, M. Thomas, S. Hill, Lester Faleiro and A. Robertson.

The dilemma of Frederic, the pirate apprentice, has been a popular musical since it first premiered in 1879. NES students delighted the audience in the typical operetta. Costumes for the show were loaned by the Kuwait Little Theatre, Ahmadi. The musical gala was organised by the NES Music Department.

Lebanon's presidential poll

A theatre for foreign players

By Michael Kull

BEIRUT, (Reuters): The reactions of Lebanese people to presidential elections in August and the prospect of a new head of state are often more a matter of temperament than politics.

Optimistic citizens may be following the local media intently, looking for any sign that the poll may herald an end to 13 years of internecine warfare and hoping that someone of stature emerges, capable of reconciling rival ideologies and sectarian ambitions.

Others, looking back at innumerable ceasefires which failed and peace plans which were never implemented, may take a much more pessimistic view.

Most Lebanese are simply spectators of bizarre theatre. Their country is the stage for a script squabbled over by regional and international powers jostling for pre-eminence.

At best, a new man will take office as president for six years with the power to change by force or persuasion the way things are done or not done in Lebanon.

At worst, he will inherit a chain of office, a palace, a posse of machine-gun-toting bodyguards, a couple of bullet-proof Cadillacs, a few miles of well-paved road and precious little else.

"It (the election) is not between the electors, not between the candidates, and not even around the person of the next president or his programme, but between forces that want to restore their former role in the election and forces that are trying to experiment with a new role," Beirut's conservative Al-Ahwal daily said.

For a start, the poll takes place in a political vacuum.

Lebanon has been virtually without government for two years because Muslim leaders have boycotted the current president, Amin Gemayel, 47, whose term ends in September.

Second, some rules have been fixed in advance.

The constitution stipulates the president must be a Maronite Christian, drawn from a privileged minority dominating the hills overlooking Beirut known as Mount Lebanon.

Recapture of Faw gives Iraq a boost

By John Rice

BAGHDAD, (AP): Iraq's recapture of the Faw peninsula from Iran this week provided Baghdad with a major political victory, despite the limited military value of the dusty uninhabited wasteland.

The successful attack on the peninsula, extending from southern Iraq into the Gulf, robbed Tehran of a key bargaining chip that could be used if the countries ever negotiate for peace.

"It's insignificant as far as the military situation is concerned," a Baghdad-based Western diplomat said of the Iraqi victory. "But psychologically, it had been the needle in their flesh."

The Iraqis are hailing their recovery of Faw as one of their greatest military triumphs in the 7-1/2-year-old Gulf war. While analysts doubt that, they concede it has given Baghdad a big morale boost.

The elite Presidential Guard and the 7th Army Corps smashed through Iranian lines north of Faw on Sunday. By Monday afternoon they had seized full control of the peninsula that dominates Iraq's two main outlets to the Gulf, the Shatt Al Arab and the Khor Abdullah waterways.

Captured
Iran captured about 20 kilometres (12 miles) of the peninsula in February 1986, stunning Iraq, which failed in repeated bloody counterattacks to retake the flatlands. Iran renamed Faw city, an abandoned refinery town. Al Zahra and held a wrestling tournament there last year to emphasise its grip.

Although Iran still occupies other small chunks of Iraqi territory along the 1,175-kilometre (730-mile border), Faw was its prize.

World's worst nuclear power plant explosion

Chernobyl accident still haunts Europeans

By Girard C. Steichen

BONN, (AP): Two years after the Chernobyl nuclear disaster, vast herds of contaminated sheep remain isolated in Britain, people in Turkey still avoid their favourite home-grown tea and residents in West Germany continue to monitor radiation.

In several East European countries, where communist authorities frequently played down the effects of the accident, the construction of new nuclear power plants goes on at full speed.

The world's worst nuclear power plant accident occurred April 26, 1986. An explosion and fire split open a reactor in the Soviet Ukraine and sent clouds of radioactive debris into the atmosphere.

Carried by strong winds and exacerbated by heavy rains, radioactive fallout outside of the Soviet Union came down most heavily in Scandinavia, Poland, Britain and in southern West Germany.

The accident left 31 dead in the Soviet Union and thousands more were exposed to dangerous levels of radiation.

While the reaction was swift in most West European countries, severe lingering effects remain in many of the hardest-hit regions.

Effects
In the lesser-affected areas, especially in southern Europe, officials report that after effects are now minimal and that the air and most foods contain acceptable radiation levels.

But in Turkey, tea drinkers have switched to imported tea.

After the accident, many European governments returned Turkish tea and hazelnuts when they were found to be contaminated beyond radiation levels established by the European Economic Community, the common market.

The Turkish government later said the tea had been destroyed, but recent press reports claimed that unscrupulous vendors had repackaged and sold the tea under different labels.

Authorities still restrict the movement and slaughter of 500,000 sheep on 750 upland farms in western Britain and Northern Ireland.

In Sweden, more than 30,000 reindeer were declared unfit for consumption this year because they contained unacceptably high levels of radiation caused by the accident. Last year, more than 75,000 animals were judged unfit for consumption.

Saved
But the Swedes say their quick response to the accident saved the reindeer industry as a whole and the traditional lifestyle of Laplanders who raise them.

Officials in Norway say up to 5 per cent of reindeer meat in the hard-hit areas of that country still must be discarded.

While special feed designed to reduce the effects of radiation exposure for reindeer and sheep has helped, officials say the damage could linger for decades.

Radioactivity still exceeds British government standards in the Peaty, sheep-rearing hills of Cumbria, in north Wales, in southwest Scotland and parts of Northern Ireland, areas where heavy rains fell shortly after the accident.

British farmers have received the equivalent of more than £5.5 million ($10 million) in government compensation.

In Austria and parts of southern West Germany, substantial numbers of deer and wild boar are considered unsafe for human consumption and are no longer hunted. Mushrooms are also contaminated, and Austrian authorities urge citizens not to eat mushrooms more than twice a month.

Accidents
The nationally-circulated West German magazine Der Spiegel, in its March 28 edition, reported that the number of highway accidents involving deer in West Germany has increased sharply since Chernobyl, in part because hunters concerned about radiation are no longer thinning the herds.

The political fallout continues to swirl in West Germany as government and opposition parties engage in a fierce debate over the safety of nuclear power.

"Chernobyl made it clear to all of us that we have no adequate way to deal with a catastrophe of this magnitude," said Lieselott Blunck, a member of West Germany's opposition Social Democratic Party.

But Martin Gruener, a parliamentary state secretary for the ministry of environmental protection and reactor safety, said long-term adverse health effects are not likely in West Germany.

The Chernobyl accident has sparked no such debate in France, which led the fight against efforts in the European Economic Community to toughen radiation standards and where the environmental movement is weak.

But in Italy, the accident led, in effect, to the scrapping of the nation's future nuclear power expansion programme.

In November 1987, the Italian electorate rejected nuclear power by a margin of 4-1.

Italy currently operates three nuclear power plants, all of which are temporarily closed for routine maintenance and reactor refuelling.

A fourth is in an advanced state of construction.

In March, Premier Giovanni Gorla decided to go ahead with completion of the plant, which angered Italy's Socialist Party and helped bring down Gorla's five-party coalition.

In Switzerland, anti-nuclear and environmental activists last year submitted enough signatures to force two referendums on nuclear energy.

One referendum calls for a 10-year moratorium on construction of new nuclear power plants. The second deals with the scrapping of the nation's five nuclear power plants and on a ban on construction of new ones.

The referendums are not expected to come to a vote until at least 1990.

Construction
Since Chernobyl, nuclear power plant construction has continued in several East European countries, including East Germany, Poland and Czechoslovakia.

The accident continues to fuel efforts of anti-nuclear and environmental groups in Yugoslavia, East Germany and Poland, and their numbers remain small and they are often harassed.

But the Chernobyl disaster has also fostered more cooperation between East and West on nuclear issues.

A Soviet delegation visited Britain in March and the two nations have agreed to exchange safety-related information in addition to details of any major radiation leaks.

West Germany has provided technical safety assistance to East Germany and last year signed an agreement with the Soviet Union for joint efforts in developing nuclear power.

Most European countries continue to test for radiation in imported foods. Blanket bans on foodstuffs were lifted in 1986.

"Coffee, chocolates, meats, dairy products, cereals and baby foods are not admitted into the country unless they carry a certificate showing they've been tested for radioactivity," said a senior Greek Health Ministry official.

People leaving Hong Kong to start a new life abroad

By Chris Peterson

HONG KONG, (Reuters): The prospect of China resuming control of Hong Kong in 1997 is hitting hard at one of the prosperous British colony's most precious resources — people.

Despite confident sounds from senior officials, thousands of Hong Kong's Chinese residents are leaving to start a new life abroad, with Australia, Canada and the United States the favourite destinations.

Britain has ruled the south China territory with its spectacular harbour for 150 years, but China resumes control in 1997 under a 1984 agreement.

China's communist rulers promise the capitalist system which has made Hong Kong one of the world's busiest trading centres will remain unchanged for 50 years after the handover.

"I have to be practical — my parents already fled China once in their lives. I want certain things for my family, so we have decided to go," said Alan, an architect emigrating with his wife and child to Canada. He did not want to give his full name.

Many of the colony's 5.6 million people found refuge here after fleeing periodic revolutionary upheavals in China over the past 40 years.

Emigration

Hong Kong officials say they do not keep a record of the number of people emigrating, but estimate net population loss at between 15,000 and 20,000 a year. Governor Sir David Wilson has said the level of emigration has not changed much over the past 20 years.

Long queues of visa applicants outside the US, Australian and Canadian consulates and remarks by senior managers from major Hong Kong companies suggest a different picture.

Political and Economic Risk Consultancy Ltd, a private firm of analysts, predicts about 50,000 people a year will leave Hong Kong in the run-up to 1997.

Another indicator comes from the colony's police force, which issues certificates on demand proving that a citizen has no criminal record. Most countries require such a document before accepting immigrants.

In 1986 the police issued over 53,000 certificates, an all-time record and up 50 per cent over the previous year. Officials said 1987 figures were still being collated but expected them to be even higher.

The consulates of Canada and Australia have reported a large boost in emigration from Hong Kong, as well as in applications.

Canada issued 22,000 emigrant visas to Hong Kong people last year, more than double the previous year. Australian officials predict well over a 50 per cent increase in emigrants this year.

"Your future may not be as bright. I won't consider migration myself at the moment, although I've had many chances to go away."

"I have been to the United Kingdom studying, but I felt that you can't really share a heart to heart with a foreigner. You miss food, family, the memories that you had and everything in Hong Kong," she said.

year, to around the 8,500 mark.

Criteria for entering the United States are stiff, and the number have remained constant over the past three years. But there are moves in the US Congress to allow a new category of immigrant, people willing to start a business in the United States creating jobs for at least 10 people.

A senior former manager at Hong Kong Company said middle-level Chinese executives were leaving in a steady stream to establish themselves abroad.

"We try and arrange a transfer to overseas branches for them, but it is becoming a major headache," he said.

Emigration plans are a frequent topic of conversation around dinner tables in Hong Kong, which has no natural resources other than people and the harbour.

Taboo
The subject is still largely taboo in the public domain, although film director Clara Law has just completed a movie addressing emigration and 1997.

The other half and the other half — tackles the emotional problems of families separated while one partner heads overseas to establish him or herself, with the wife or husband following later.

The Chinese-language film is due out next month and Law said in a recent interview: "What I am trying to say in the film is that this absurd to give up all you have at present for the sake of preparing for your future."

"Your future may not be as bright. I won't consider migration myself at the moment, although I've had many chances to go away."

"I have been to the United Kingdom studying, but I felt that you can't really share a heart to heart with a foreigner. You miss food, family, the memories that you had and everything in Hong Kong," she said.

MIDEAST PUZZLE

Shooting of Robert Kennedy

Assassination files raise new questions

By Russell Snyder

SACRAMENTO, California, (UPI): It may be weeks before researchers can draw firm conclusions about the assassination of Robert F. Kennedy from the 50,000 documents, 2,900 photos and other pieces of evidence made public last week.

But already, the newly opened police files at the California state archives in Sacramento have spotlighted oversights and blunders by the Los Angeles police department in its investigation of the assassination almost 20 years ago.

The revelations include proof that police only 1-1/2 months after the shooting inexplicably burned 2,410 photographs collected by detectives — believed to be nearly half of all the pictures gathered during the investigation.

Kennedy assassination experts say their initial study of the files confirm that serious inconsistencies plague the police conclusion that Sirhan Sirhan acted alone when he shot Kennedy in the Ambassador Hotel pantry on June 5, 1968.

The researchers — including historians, journalists and authors — say the files also suggest there were official efforts to mislead the public about the existence of evidence that could raise doubts about the case.

One high-ranking Los Angeles police department official with experience in sensational murder cases said it's easy for some evidence to be overlooked in the frenzy of a big case.

Pressure
"There's a tremendous amount of pressure," said the official, who asked not to be identified. "Everyone's giving orders and people investigating have a high degree of paranoia."

Asked if he thought police could have stonewalled outside efforts to prove mistakes were made in the case, he said that "it's possible."

"Before long, if a photo or something comes along that muddies your case, you keep it off to the side," he said. "They sure wouldn't make it available."

Critics say that's why police kept the files locked until now despite official promises since 1969 to make them public.

The files chronicle in numbing detail the events surrounding Kennedy's assassination shortly after he won California's Democratic presidential primary.

Moments after Kennedy spoke to cheering supporters in the hotel ballroom, he left the stage via the hotel's kitchen serving area. There, police say, Sirhan stepped up to the New York senator and began firing.

Witnesses
Since there were so many witnesses to the shooting — one document names more than 70 in the pantry alone — and since Sirhan admitted killing Kennedy, the case appeared dramatically simple.

"It was an open-and-shut murder case," says Ed Davis, who supervised Sirhan's first interrogation. Davis became chief of police a month after police officially closed the "Special Unit: Senator" investigation in 1969.

"This was the classic murder case," says Davis, now a Republican state senator. "It happened to be of historic and international interest. We were probably more cautious than in any other case in the history of the department."

Even with Sirhan in custody, police were careful to track down possible conspiracy plots to kill Kennedy. The files show they investigated 25 conspiracy theories purporting to link Sirhan to groups ranging from the Black Panthers to the Teamsters Union. Police concluded the theories were without merit.

Even the famed account of a

woman in the polka-dot dress, who two witnesses claimed ran from the hotel shouting "we shot him" was determined by detectives to be fabricated.

Yet, despite what appears to be a thorough investigation by police, some serious questions remain, researchers insist. They include:

● How close was Sirhan to Kennedy? Lab tests showed the fatal shot was fired 1 inch (2.5 cm) from Kennedy's ear. Not a single witness said Sirhan was that close.

● What was the trajectory of the bullets? Some evidence unearthed by researchers suggests all the shots couldn't have come from one gun.

● Why did police hinder efforts by researchers to find answers to questions?

Experts like Gregory Stone, a political scientist who played a leading role in pressuring police to release the files, say some of those questions may never be answered.

The reason lies in the revelation this week that police destroyed 2,410 photos taken during the case. It may never be known if the photos were important.

Roy Keene, the police lieutenant who ordered the destruction of the photos, says he doesn't remember the incident. But Keene, now a real estate salesman in Oregon, adds: "I guarantee you they were of no evidentiary value."

Another document that surfaced last week indicates police were sensitive to outside efforts to discredit their investigation.

In the mid-1970s, the Kennedy conspiracy controversy had reached a climax with the disclosure that police disposed of ceiling tiles, door frames and other evidence some researchers speculated could prove Sirhan did not act alone.

"They were ceiling tiles and that sort of thing that had no evidentiary value," Davis says. "They didn't have any powder burns on them or lead or anything. There's no point to keeping all that stuff."

Yet, a confidential memo written in 1974 by detectives and addressed to assistant chief Daryl Gates describes a secret photograph that "may conflict with previous statements made by the chief of police and other officials."

The photograph showed a bullet removed from Kennedy's body and one test-fired from Sirhan's weapon. The memo said the picture should not be released because, although the two bullets were clearly fired from the same weapon, this might not be immediately apparent to laymen.

Davis says he does not recall the memo. A spokesman for Gates, now Los Angeles Police Chief, declined to comment on the matter.

Critics say another oversight by police, confirmed by the files, is that investigators paid scant attention to an armed security guard standing near Kennedy.

The files show police never asked the guard, Thane Cesar, if he fired his gun although two witnesses recalled seeing him with gun in hand.

VENICE, Italy (AP): One of the world's most enchanting cities was born 15 centuries ago when some frightened citizens of the Roman Empire decided the 100-odd islands in the Gulf of Venice would make a handy refuge from barbaric invaders on the mainland.

Now their 20th-century descendants are fleeing in the other direction, abandoning the decaying lagoon city to hordes of tourists and real-estate speculators.

Ironically, the flight comes as two decades of intentions to rescue Venice from high tides and polluted waters seem close to becoming reality.

After spending billions of lire (hundreds of millions of dollars) provided under special national legislation, officials have come up with plans for movable dikes and sophisticated sewers to stop the lagoon's green-black waters from doing further damage.

The initiative took root after a disastrous 1966 flood, which prompted rallying cries of "Save Venice." Art lovers from around the world pitched in to rescue palaces, churches and paintings from the annual high tides that batter the city.

But no one came up with a "Save the Venetians" campaign.

Residents can stomach the stench of garbage from the canals, which serve as sewers as well as transportation arteries. They can put up with winter floods of water and summer floods of tourists. It's the lack of affordable housing that's forcing Venice's proud, sea-loving natives to terra firma.

A report prepared by a provincial agency noted that in 1951, Venice had 175,000 people. By 1960, 50,000 had left to escape overcrowding. By last year, residents had dropped to 83,000, with one-fifth more than 60 years old.

And the report predicted the population could shrink to as few as 20,000 by the year 2015. "If we go ahead at this rate, they'll be zero," said Giuliano Zanon, a Venetian who wrote the report.

Zanon said that if the city had developed a plan when the exodus began, they could have done something. But they didn't do anything.

Decaying lagoon: Venetians wade through flood water, a common occurrence in winter.

bers have been closing their doors along the canals, the narrow, zigzagging streets. Popping up everywhere — sometimes four, five or six to a calle — are shops selling nothing but carnival masks, souvenirs of the Mardi Gras festivities that pack the city with visitors each winter.

The mask shops have become a symbol for Venetians, who say the loss of the city's natives is robbing the city of something precious.

"Venice's soul is emptying out. It's becoming a Disneyland, a spiritually poor one," said Gianluigi Casini, an architect who has helped restore canal-side palaces.

"When I was a boy, all the kids would be playing in the piazzas. Now there are few kids," said Casini, who at 34 is among the dwindling numbers of young Venetians.

"Only old people stay, those who can't go away. There are so many empty houses ... (yet) most of my friends have gone ... for lack of houses," said Casini, who lives with his parents in Santa Croce, one of Venice's six historic "sestieri," or districts.

Some of Casini's friends have moved to non-descript Mestre, just on the other side of the 2.5-mile (4-km) causeway that leads to Venice and which shares Venice's municipal government.

Mestre has mushroomed from a population of 50,000, when Casini was born to about 250,000, triple that of Venice's historic center. Several thousand residents commute to Venice for jobs as hotel maids, souvenir sellers or waiters.

Even some of Venice's famed gondoliers have moved to Mestre. Casini, who supplements his architect's income by teaching art history in Mestre High School, said he can't afford Venice rents, running 800,000 to 1.2 million lire (675 to 975 dollars) for a two-room apartment.

"I'd like to stay, but it's just not possible," he said, when asked about his future.

Numerous

Under the city's rent-control laws, apartments should rent for much, much less. But as elsewhere in Italy, landlords would rather keep apartments vacant than rent for the low legal price and hope for a buyer or someone desperate or rich enough to pay illegally high rents.

Some of the numerous uninhabited apartments along the Grand Canal are kept as weekend retreats by the rich, who come from Milan, 267 kilometers (165 miles) away, or as vacation homes for foreigners, who spend at most a month a year here.

Other houses are in no condition for living. Waters lapping at the front door and sea breezes drifting by the balcony may inspire poetry, but flooding and salty sea air constantly wear away at foundations and beams.

Restoration, especially of historic buildings, is a costly enterprise anywhere, but in Venice it's particularly expensive.

Supplies arrive by barge, not trucks, and porters deliver them in small loads on carts in carless Venice. With many artisans among the exodus, skilled laborers must be brought in from the mainland. Costs of transportation — and tourists' spendthrift tendencies — also account for higher prices in stores.

Natives complain that a pair of shoes that goes for 50,000 lire (42 dollars) in Mestre sells for double that in Venice. Fruit and vegetables generally cost about 30 per cent more in Venice when compared with a Rome market.

Yet not all young Venetians are planning to leave. Gianfranco Tagliapietra, who runs a camera shop, said his teenage daughter is looking forward to growing up and making money in the tourist business.

Following the 1966 flood, tourism took off, perhaps inspired by the worry that Venice someday might be swamped for good by the high tides.

By the 1970s, real estate speculators started to move in, betting that the tourism boom would last. It became fashionable for big-name companies, like Fiat, to restore palaces for headquarters or exhibitions.

Recently elected Mayor Antonio Casellati says he would like to see a law that would force people who buy real estate to live in their purchase or to rent it for several years only to native Venetians. But he admits such a goal might be unreachable in a free-market society.

In the last few years, some young Venetians who wanted to stay in Venice have taken advantage of national and regional subsidized mortgages. The city bought up many buildings and rented them out.

"But the city can't buy all the houses," the mayor said.

CAIRO — When the Egyptian anthropologist Ibrahim Abu-el-Aish founded his farm settlement called Sekem 10 years ago, sandy desert covered the 70 hectares of land some 30 kilometers north of Cairo near the city of Bilbeis.

Today, Sekem is an oasis of woods, stables, fields and round, rose-colored houses.

"To protect the fields from the desert, trees were planted all around," the 51-year-old Abu-el-Aish said. "Where there are trees, the birds come. So now we have a little Garden of Eden."

It was not easy to build Sekem, whose name in ancient Egyptian means "life force from the sun."

Just how difficult it would be to transplant anthroposophist ideas acquired in West Germany to a conservative, strongly Islamic Third World nation became clear to Abu-el-Aish when he used the phrase "biological-dynamic cultivation."

Local authorities thought that had something to do with chemical weapons and threatened to close the farm down.

But Sekem, probably the only anthroposophist farm in the Arab world, succeeded.

Now 160 people work there, including 13 German-speaking

In an unusual marriage of ideas, an Islamic commune in Egypt has used an Austrian's philosophy to make the desert bloom.

Europeans. They live and work according to the ideas propounded by the Austrian-born philosopher Rudolf Steiner around the turn of the century.

At the center of the enterprise are Abu-el-Aish, his family and the Europeans. They believe in a "naturalistic, conscious and sensitive way of life."

Without using chemicals, they produce vegetables, fruit, cheese and tea that are sold as far away as West Germany. Demand has grown so great that another 1,000 hectares are being cultivated by outsiders using Sekem methods, and with quality control, packaging and distribution done by the farm.

Abu-el-Aish got the idea for Sekem during a trip through Egypt in 1975.

"The view of mass poverty and hopelessness shocked me," he remembers. "I didn't want to complain and write books about how the Egyptians should solve their problems, but instead get involved and set an example."

After 20 years in West Germany, the pharmacist with a doctoral degree quit his job heading a research group and returned to Egypt "to help people by teaching."

Learning is one of the ideals that Sekem is supposed to embody. Work groups meet before work begins to compare notes and discuss plans.

Once a week, all gather in a large hall where "everything possible is discussed and debated," according to Klaus Fintelmann, a 60-year-old West German teacher who advises Abu-el-Aish on education issues.

"That way the workers learn to discuss their occupation and the people involved with it," he says.

"The subservient attitude has to be replaced by a person who can think critically," says Fintelmann, who visits Sekem regularly. "Our philosophy is to produce food and medicine with joy in order to further develop our consciousness. No one should be a master, everyone should be a servant of society."

Projects include a carpentry shop and a pottery now being built. Also planned are facilities for making clothes and weaving baskets.

It does not bother Abu-el-Aish, a faithful Muslim, that anthroposophy views Christianity as a central development in the history of humankind.

"The ideas of Rudolf Steiner are a philosophy, not a religion," he says. "What we have created here is an anthroposophy shaped by Islam, otherwise no one would have accepted us or our ideas about life."

Abu-el-Aish's life's work has helped the native farmers in more than their personal development. As an unexpected side effect, those who have worked at Sekem have had better luck finding a partner in the Egyptian marriage market.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF
ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠83 ♥AQ7 ♦K983 ♣AQ76

The bidding has proceeded:

North East South West

Pass 3 ♠ ?

What action do you take?

A.—Beware, everything is against you! The vulnerability is unfavorable, you have the death holding, a doubleton, in the enemy suit, only three-card heart support with no intermediates, and partner is a passed hand. Act only if money means nothing to you; otherwise pass.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠872 ♥Q762 ♦8543 ♣7

Your partner opens the bidding with a forcing bid of two hearts. What do you respond?

A.—If you think you have a poor hand, you need to brush up on your hand evaluation. A singleton and four trumps to a high honor is a powerful holding opposite a demand bid. If you have some method of showing a singleton, do so; if not, we prefer a positive response of three hearts to a negative two no trump. Who cares about point count?

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠963 ♥A8 ♦KQ7653 ♣A6

The bidding has proceeded:

South West North East

1 ♥ 2 ♣ 4 NT Pass

5 ♥ Pass 6 ♣ Pass

What action do you take?

A.—Although partner is not showing much with his rebid except a six-card suit, your hand has become enormous. Your prime controls and three trumps are all gold, so much so that we think a raise to three spades is an underbid. We would jump to four spades.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠K5 ♥KJ8 ♦AQ7652 ♣K6

What is your opening bid?

A.—Despite your six-card suit, we suggest you open the bidding with one no trump. If you don't, you will have a difficult task ahead trying to describe your good, balanced hand. If you were to replace a low diamond with a low club, you would have had no qualms about opening one no trump. Where's the difference?

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠7 ♥AJ954 ♦AK7 ♣9832

The bidding has proceeded:

South West North East

1 ♥ 2 ♣ 1 ♠ Pass

What do you bid now?

A.—The one thing you can't do is rebid two hearts—that promises a six-card suit. Therefore, you have to choose between one no trump, with your singleton spade, or two clubs, with your rotten suit. Since partner might pass your second suit with only three-card support, we think one no trump is the lesser evil.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠8 ♥AK9762 ♦872 ♣AJ3

The bidding has proceeded:

South West North East

1 ♥ 2 ♣ 4 NT Pass

5 ♥ Pass 6 ♣ Pass

What action do you take?

A.—Why should partner be cue-bidding at the six-level when he could have done so at the three-level? The answer must be that he is not cue-bidding, but placing the contract. West must have taken advantage of the vulnerability to make a psychic bid. Pass. If you're wrong, simply remind partner that the Blackwood bidder is captain of the auction.

JUNIOR TIMES

Dear Junior Readers,

A high school senior in Kuwait found some things printed in a textbook he was assigned to read for a course he was taking during the summer of a university in California which were uncomplimentary toward Arabs. He wrote the publisher and said that he thought the remarks were unfair to Arabs.

Although it took several months for a reply, he finally received a letter from one of the authors of the textbook saying the examples would be changed.

As you read textbooks, newspapers or magazines you should be aware of things that are written that are unfair to any nationality. And when you find such things written, do as this high school student did — write a letter and bring it to the attention of the publisher. Your letter could make a difference in what people learn and think about others.

The wolf and the seven kids

A GOAT had seven kids whom she loved dearly and guarded carefully against the wolf. One day when she had to go out for provisions, she called them all together and said, "Dear children, I must go and bring food. Beware of the wolf and don't let him in. Listen carefully, because he often tries to disguise himself. You will always be able to recognize him by his hoarse voice and black paws. Be watchful, for once he gets into the house, he'll eat you all up."

Then she left, and before long, the wolf stood at the door and called, "Dear children, open up, I'm your mother and I've brought back some lovely things for you."

But he had set his paws on the windowsill, and the seven kids saw them and said, "You are not our mother. None of her feet is black like yours. You are the wolf and we won't let you in."

The wolf went to a baker and said, "Cover my paws with freshly made dough." When the baker had done so, the wolf went to the miller and said, "Sprinkle white flour over my paws."

The miller refused. "If you don't do it, I'll eat you up," said the wolf, and the miller was forced to do what the wolf asked. When the miller had finished, the wolf went back to the house of the seven kids. He stood by the door and said, "Dear children, let me in. I am your mother and I have a present for each of you."

The seven kids first asked to see the wolf's paws, and when they saw that they were snow-white and heard how softly he spoke, they thought he was their mother and opened the door. The wolf came in. As soon as they recognized him, they hid quickly, as best they could. The first got under the table, the second into the bed, the third into the oven, the fourth ran into the kitchen, the fifth hid in the cupboard, the sixth slid under a big pot, and the seventh squeezed himself into the grandfather clock. But the wolf found all of them and swallowed them whole, except the youngest, hidden in the clock. He was saved.

Since the wolf had satisfied his appetite, he left and soon afterward the goat returned home. What a hue and cry! The wolf had been there and had eaten her children! She thought they were all gone until the youngest jumped out of the clock, and related how the tragedy had taken place.

In the meantime, the wolf, because he had eaten so much, took himself off to a green meadow, lay down in the sunlight and fell fast asleep.

The old goat thought that, somehow, she might still save her children, and so she said to the youngest kid, "Take some yarn, a needle and a pair of shears, and follow me."

She went out in search of the wolf and found him snoring in the meadow. "Here he lies, the horrid wolf, after having eaten my six children for an afternoon snack," she said, as she inspected him carefully from all sides. "Let me have the shears. If only they are still alive inside him."

Then she cut open his stomach and the six kids, which in his greed the wolf had swallowed whole, sprang out unharmed. The goat told them to go at once and find some heavy stones. Then they filled the wolf's stomach with the stones, sewed him up and hid themselves behind some brushwood.

When the wolf had had his sleep, he awoke, but he felt so heavy that he said, "All this rumbling and grumbling inside me, what can it be? I only ate six kids."

He thought perhaps a drink of fresh water would help him and went off to the spring. But when he bent down to drink, he lost his balance because of the heavy stones within him and plunged headlong into the water.

Amoco gas, foreign operations set for growth

ACQUISITION of Dome Petroleum Ltd., Calgary, will make Amoco Corp. the largest owner and producer of gas reserves in North America.

However, it is inevitable that an increasing portion of Amoco's upstream investment will be going into areas outside North America, the company told security analysts in Boston.

Amoco figures place the companies' total North American gas production at 2,636 bcf in 1987 from reserves of 15,825 tcf as of last Dec 31. An Amoco subsidiary expects to close its $5.5 billion acquisition of Dome by midyear.

"Natural gas is an abundant energy resource on this continent and should be viewed as the cornerstone of North American energy security," said Amoco Chairman Richard Morrow.

Plentiful

"Opportunities to expand supply are plentiful, the cost is reasonable, and gas can be produced and consumed with little impact on the environment."

Amoco's challenge is to continue to replace production, said H. Laurence Fuller, president. The company replaced world-wide production of 4.7 billion bbl of oil equivalent the past 10 years.

Amoco will continue to explore and produce in areas where it is operationally strong, such as mature U.S. and Canadian basins.

Foreign operations probably will account for an average of more than 50 per cent of Amoco's total upstream spending during the next 5 years, compared with an average of 34 per cent during the past 20 years, Fuller said.

For example, Amoco was one of the most successful in the 10th round of U.K. offshore licensing. It was awarded six licences covering more than 800 sq km.

Yugoslavia and Albania to sign border trade pact

BELGRADE, April 25, (Reuters): Yugoslavia and neighbouring Albania will sign a border trade agreement in Belgrade, the Yugoslav state news agency Tanjug said yesterday.

Albania, a Communist-ruled country long closed to almost any form of foreign contact, signed a border trade agreement with Greece last week. Diplomats said the agreements were signs of the country's slow opening to the outside world.

The agreement states that border trade should make up 20 per cent of overall bilateral trade, Tanjug said. This amounted to only $63 million in 1987, due to a drought in Albania which prevented it from meeting its contracts, according to Tanjug.

Tanjug said border trade was one of the forms of cooperation proposed at the first-ever meeting of Balkan foreign ministers in Belgrade last February, in which Albania participated.

Non-Opec Mexico, China agree to cut exports

Prospects uncertain for oil talks

VIENNA, April 25, (Reuters): When Opec meets producers from outside the organisation in Vienna this week, the chances that their unprecedented talks will produce effective steps to boost oil prices are uncertain, analysts say.

They also say they are unsure whether the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries (Opec) can still call the shots on oil prices, and pointed to the fact that Opec called this week's meeting with seven non-Opec producers as a sign of its limits.

The seven non-Opec producers invited to Tuesday's talks — Angola, China, Colombia, Egypt, Malaysia, Mexico and Oman — met recently in London to discuss ways of boosting the market.

Between them the seven produce a little over eight million barrels per day (bpd), of which they export about half.

Oil prices this year have been as much as $4 a barrel below Opec's reference price of $18. A key reason is that producers are pumping more oil than the rest of the world wants.

"The meeting must give an indication that there will be some sort of production cut in order to keep oil prices up," Dillard Spriggs, of Petroleum Analysis Ltd, said in New York.

"But I don't think the statement they make will have much meat on it," he added.

One reason, London stock-brokers Phillips and Drew suggest in a recent report is that any pumping slowdown non-Opec producers offer — the report says an offer of a five per cent production cuts is likely — will be conditional on Opec support.

That may not come immediately.

"The most likely scenario for Opec is to say they will continue talks with non-Opec producers and if they need to change quotas they will do so at the full ministerial meeting in June," said Vahan Zanyan of Petroleum Finance Co.

Output

Opec's 13 members normally meet in Vienna in June and December to study the market and decide on any changes in production levels they think necessary to boost prices.

And then there is the question of what Opec will cut.

Opec pumped an estimated 17.4 million bpd in March, well above its overall output ceiling of 15.06 million bpd agreed last December, industry sources said.

That agreement excluded Iraq which refused to sign the production pact as it wanted parity with its Gulf war foe Iran. Iraq pumps around 2.5 million bpd, the sources estimated.

Changes

"Will Opec cut from its quota levels, or down to its quota level?" said Sarah Emerson, an analyst with the US-based firm Energy Security Analysis Inc.

"The talks are aimed at stringing the market along but at some point fundamentals will take hold ... prices will reflect oversupply," she said.

The April 26 and 27 Opec/non-Opec talks are due to be followed on April 28 by a "consultative conference" of all 13 Opec members which could reconvene as an emergency meeting and approve changes in production levels, oil analysts said.

But producers like Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates are known to oppose cuts in quotas, they said.

Opec 'hawks' Iran and Algeria have favoured cuts but Iran recently seems to have softened its stance, they added.

Non-Opec Mexico and China have said they are willing to cut exports if an agreement can be reached with Opec, while Norway also outside the organisation, has said it will continue cuts on its output.

Major non-Opec producers Britain and the United States, however, have not been invited to Tuesday's meeting. They have often said they are unwilling to interfere with market forces.

Travel agencies also thriving as tours become cheaper

Europeans going to US in record numbers

FRANKFURT, April 25, (AP): Spurred by the low dollar and cheaper air fares, Europeans from Scandinavia to Spain are rediscovering the new world and are expected to set a new record this year for US visits.

Tourist visa applications are flooding US consulates across Western Europe, and tour operators say the number of bookings is sharply up from last year's record.

"The numbers (of visa applicants) are increasing dramatically," said Ira Levy, chief of the non-immigrant visa branch at the US embassy in London.

Donald Mudd, chief of consular services at the US consulate in Frankfurt, said the consulate issued about 600,000 tourist visas last year.

"We expect a 30-50 per cent rise this year and this pretty much reflects the rest of Western Europe," Mudd told the Associated Press.

The Association of European Airlines, which includes 21 major airline companies, said the total number of Europeans flying to the United States has increased about 48 per cent since 1985.

According to the latest statistics available to the Brussels-based Association, 7.2 million Europeans took flights to the United States from January to October 1987.

Officials across Western Europe polled by the AP said the first two months of this year indicate that 1988 will be a boom year for travel to the United States.

Britain and West Germany provide the bulk of tourists visiting the United States and the two countries are expected to combine for nearly 2 million US trips this year.

Levy said the number of non-immigrant visas issued in Britain for the United States was expected to reach 900,000 this year from 642,000 in 1987.

January this year saw a 69-per cent increase in issued non-immigrant visas over January 1987, and February figures rose 66 per cent over the same month last year, Levy said.

Flourishing

Sheila Beecham, owner of the American Round-Up, a travel agency in Hemel Hempstead, near London, said her business was flourishing.

"Things are doing very well. The growth in America travel because of the dollar recently is tremendous. In the last three months I've had the same amount of business as all last year," said Ms. Beecham, whose agency specialises in adventure vacations to the Western states.

In West Germany, where the dollar has dropped 50 per cent in three years and now is worth about 1.69 marks, travel agencies are also thriving as US tours become cheaper.

"We had 124,000 (US) bookings last year and the trend this year is continuing to go up. Our January figures are 25 per cent over last January's when we had 25,705 bookings," said Rolf Neulander of Deutsches Reisebüro, a travel agency which holds the largest section of the US market in West Germany. The Swiss are also frequent international travellers: 235,000 of them visited the United States last year, a 27-year per cent increase over 1986. A further rise is expected this year.

"The United States has come within reach of a clientele that earlier would not have been able to afford it," said Hermann Amrhein of the Kouni Travel Agency in Zurich.

Reason

"The dollar was certainly the primary reason but there are also the attractive Trans-Atlantic airfares. Paying less than 1,000 Swiss francs ($715) for a flight is very advantageous in terms of distance, compared to airfares inside Europe," he said.

In Greece, a Pan Am official in Athens said bookings for US destinations were up 30 per cent this year compared with 1987.

Oteiba to miss Opec meeting

ABU DHABI, April 25, (Reuters): United Arab Emirates (UAE) Oil Minister Mana Said Al Oteiba will miss Tuesday's Opec meeting in Vienna with non-Opec producers, oil sources said yesterday.

They said it would be the first time since he was appointed 20 years ago that Oteiba had not attended a full meeting of Opec.

The sources cited health reasons for his absence and said he would be represented by his undersecretary, Al Shaiba Al Hamili, at the talks to discuss ways to prop up oil prices.

More restructuring needed

Brighter outlook for world steelmakers

BRUSSELS, Belgium, April 25, (AP): The world's biggest steelmakers said yesterday that years of restructuring, marked by massive layoffs and a search for new products and technologies, have improved the outlook for their sector.

At a board of directors meeting of the International Iron and Steel Institute, they said the industry's outlook is positive but that more restructuring was needed.

IIISI chairman David M. Roderick, who is also head of USX Corp., the largest US steelmaker, said American producers have restored "competitiveness by extensive restructuring, spinoffs of marginal operations ... and major efforts to develop and defend steel markets."

Research

A joint research programme of US steel and car makers has shown steel to be "the most economic material" for use in cars, he said.

While plastics were once thought to be cheaper in a production of fewer than 100,000 cars a year, tests at US car plants have shown steel to be "the most competitive material" in a production of as low as 35,000 cars, he said.

Jan D. Hooglandt, head of Holland's Hoogovens Group BV and an IIISI vice president, said since 1980 there have been significant job losses and production cuts.

As a result, "the outlook for steel remains positive in Europe (although) further restructuring is required," he said.

Hiroshi Saito, head of Japan's Nippon Steel Corp., said new technologies are reducing output costs and surplus production capacity.

Operations

He said Nippon Steel has invested in technologies that reduce some production operations from several days to a few minutes.

Also "new products have been introduced to the market" with new characteristics, including "vibration and noise suppression, electromagnetic shielding and decorative functions," he said.

Steel makers across the world have in recent years cut output and their work forces. In the United States alone, 216,000 steel workers — 55 per cent of the work force — have been laid off since 1981, Roderick said.

The IIISI estimates 1988 world steel demand to reach 764 million metric tons, 10 million tons over 1987 and 39 million tons more than in 1986. The 1988 rise in demand follows a 4-per cent jump in 1987 consumption.

Producers in the IIISI survey account for 59 per cent of 1987 world production and about 97 per cent of world output excluding the Soviet Union and other East bloc countries, China and North Korea.

The March output increase was led for the third consecutive month by the United States where output rose 19 per cent to 7.95 million tons.

The European Economic Community's production rose by 3.7 per cent (to 11.65 million tons). Japan's rose by 9.8 per cent (to 8.77 million tons) and South Korea recorded a 29 per cent jump in output (to 1.59 million tons).

In the first quarter of 1988, steel output of the non-Communist nations rose by 14 per cent to 116.7 million tons compared with the same period of 1987, the IIISI said.

Rising pay for US corporate elite angers some labour leaders

NEW YORK, April 25, (Reuters): The annual pay of America's corporate elite soared by 48 per cent last year, angering some labour leaders and raising questions about the propriety of salaries that reach into the millions.

The average compensation for the two top executives at 339 US firms surveyed by the magazine Business Week was $1.8 million.

Jim Manzi, the 36-year-old chairman of the computer software firm Lotus Development Corp., topped the list with 1987 salary and stock options of $2.6 million.

Chrysler Corp chairman Lee Iacocca, even after $6 million pay cut, was ranked second with $17.9 million, a figure that led United Auto Workers vice president Marc Stepp to call Chrysler "selfish, greedy and insensitive."

Six other top executives earned more than $10 million last year.

But is anybody worth that much? "Nobody's bothered by what Bill Cosby or Michael Jackson make," said Kevin Murphy, a University of Rochester business professor. TV star Cosby, Forbes magazine has estimated, earned some $57 million last year.

"But that's because people are acutely aware that they're being paid for their performance," Murphy told Reuters. "Ceos (chief executive officers) are important, too, and can make firms swing in value by billions of dollars."

"And their high payments are often paltry compared to the gains for the company they make. I don't think Iacocca deserves even a small fraction of the flak he gets, if you consider the money that's gone to shareholders since he took over," he said.

High

But, said Wharton Business School professor David Larcker, "it's very difficult to know what the appropriate level of compensation for a chief executive is. There is no benchmark price."

Back in 1950, when Business Week's executive pay survey first appeared, the president of General Electric Co had the highest pay package totalling $277,000. By 1960, General Motors Corp's chairman led the list at $670,350, as he did in 1970, with $790,000.

Lost in the debate over who gets what and what is too much, some analysts say, is the whole idea of how executive salaries are determined.

"I'm a great believer in high pay for high performance," said Graef Crystal, a professor at the Berkeley Business School in California. "What bothers me is that accompanying this high pay for high performance ought to be high risk," he said.

"The real abuse may lie with someone making a scant $2 million to $3 million a year but who has delivered zilch to shareholders," Crystal said. "That's the guy you should be hanging from the lightpole."

Of the 25 top-paid executives surveyed by Business Week, all but two got most of their money by cashing in stock options at prices fixed previously and often far below the current value of the shares.

Options

"Accountants have been holding a sale of (executive) stock options since 1950s," said Crystal. "People have concluded that you can grant these options and don't have to charge your earnings one nickel," he said.

But, he added: "In effect, by giving a stock option, you have sold stock for less than it was worth, and anytime you sell property at a discount, you must incur some cost."

Inflation-linked pay rises planned for Turkey

KONYA, Turkey, April 25, (Reuters): Turkey plans to give all civil servants and public sector employees inflation linked pay rises every six months from July, a cabinet minister said yesterday. "We will never let our civil servants and workers be drowned by inflation," State Minister Abdullah Tenekci told reporters in the central city of Konya. The new system, likely to dampen widespread trade union-led unrest, will start on July 1. Tenekci, quoted by the Anatolian News Agency, did not say which inflation rate would be used to calculate new rises — consumer price inflation currently running at an annual rate of 70 per cent or wholesale inflation, now 65 per cent. Prime Minister Turgut Ozal's government has ordered rises of up to 10 per cent on prices of many state-controlled goods and services since November to cut a ballooning budget deficit.

Trade unions have threatened mass strikes from May unless wages are brought into line with inflation and the minimum monthly salary of 74,500 lira ($60) is raised.

The average monthly wage for a factory worker is 90,000 lira ($72) and a middle to senior ranking civil servant can expect to take home about 500,000 lira ($400).

French managers accused of high-tech exports to Moscow

PARIS, April 25, (Reuters): Two former heads of France's leading manufacturers of industrial equipment have been charged with breaking a Western ban on exporting sensitive technology to the Soviet Union, legal officials said on Thursday. They said Jean-Paul Chamontou, the former chairman of Machine Franchise Lourde (MLF) and Louis Tardif, ex-chairman of subsidiary Forest-Line, were accused last week of "supplying the agents of a foreign power with information." Two chief executives working for the two firms were arrested on the same charges. The four men have been remanded in custody. The arrests followed a long police investigation into the firm's activities, the officials said.

The Western trade watchdog body Cocom asked the French government last year to account for shipments of modern propeller-milling machines to the Soviet Union in the mid-1970s by the forest-line, then called ratier forest.

The request came after Japanese computer giant Toshiba, itself facing international condemnation for selling technology allowing Moscow to build quieter nuclear submarines, said ratier forest had made similar sales several years before.

The officials said recent sales by the two French firms were also being investigated.

Cocom (the Coordinating Committee for Multinational Export Controls), which groups Japan and all Nato members except Iceland, draws up lists of strategically useful technology and tries to prevent its export to Warsaw Pact countries.

US hotel chain quits S. Africa

JOHANNESBURG, April 25, (Reuters): The US Westin Hotel chain said last week it was joining the list of foreign companies leaving South Africa by ending a contract to manage Johannesburg's best-known hotel, the Carlton. Hotel general manager Patrick Kelly said the departure of Westin Hotels and resorts from South Africa came in response to rising pressure from the US anti-apartheid lobby. "It was not Westin's desire to pull out," Kelly, a Westin employee, told a news conference. "In recent months the anti-South Africa sentiment has increased substantially in the United States," Kelly said, adding "we can't avoid it any longer." The 670-room hotel's South African owners, Anglo American Properties Ltd, will keep it open, although Carlton has lost money for the past three years and its 1987 room occupancy rate was just 47 per cent. Like most major South African hotels, the Carlton, which towers over central Johannesburg, accepts guests of all races. More than 140 US companies have withdrawn from South Africa over the past two years, including such giants as International Business Machines Corp., General Motors Corp., Coca-Cola Co. and Eastman Kodak Co. About 160 American companies still operating in South Africa are under increasing pressure to leave because of this country's apartheid race policies. A new bill drafted by West Virginia Congressman Bob Wise seeks to force all US oil companies out of South Africa. Sanctions have cut US trade and Japan has supplanted the United States as South Africa's biggest trading partner.

DEALERS ANTICIPATE TRADING WILL REMAIN DIRECTIONLESS UNTIL FRIDAY UNLESS TOMORROW'S U.S. FIRST QUARTER GNP ESTIMATE PROVIDES A DRAMATIC SURPRISE. DEALERS ARGUE ANY SURGE IN U.S. GNP COULD HIT U.S. BONDS, DEPRESSING WALL STREET AS A RESULT.

French markets dip

Dollar steady, gold slightly higher

LONDON, April 25. (Reuters): The dollar was steady and most stock markets were quiet this morning, but the French franc dipped and Paris shares fell sharply in response to the vote in yesterday's first round of the French presidential election.

Oil prices held around Friday's closing levels - British North Sea Brent crude was quoted around $17.10 a barrel for May loading - and the price of gold was fixed in London at $449.75 an ounce, up 50 cents from Friday's finish.

Tokyo, the world's biggest stock market rose 155.08 points, to a record 77,213.45. London shares by late morning had lost most of their opening gains and the 100-share FTSE index was only half a point down on its Friday close of 1,771.6.

But the Paris Bourse indicator fell as much as 3.1 per cent by mid-morning, as dealers said they were upset that Conservative Prime Minister Jacques Chirac won just under 20 per cent in yesterday's voting, compared with Socialist President Francois Mitterrand's 34 per cent.

Dealer "No one wants to sit around as things get bleaker over the next two weeks," a Paris share dealer said. The final round of voting will be held on May 8.

The French franc fell as much as two centimes to approach 5.7 francs to the dollar, before settling just below 5.69.

"It's a normal effect of the election - Chirac's performance was fairly disappointing," a Paris currency dealer said.

Most other currency exchange rates held steady, with the dollar hardly changed at 1.6735 West German marks and 124.60 Japanese yen. It traded at $1.8830 to the pound sterling.

"The dollar seems to have risen back over the last few days on little more than a lack of reasons to sell it," said a currency analyst with a British bank.

Concern that US inflation is on the rise and over the massive American trade deficit should depress the dollar, dealers said.

But for many, their worries about tension in the Gulf, and a widely-held view that US interest rates will rise soon make the dollar an attractive place to hold funds.

Those same concerns have been boosting gold, traditionally favoured by investors when international tensions or when inflation threatens to erode the value of cash and securities.

Worries about inflation had weighed on stock markets, too.

But Tokyo stockbrokers say they expect their market to rally.

"We are above 27,000 and going strong," said Tadaaki

Uehara, deputy general manager at Wako Securities.

"There is no specific bad news, and the domestic economy remains bright," said deputy branch manager Takeshi Murakami of Schroder Securities. "The Tokyo market is still on an upswing."

Meanwhile, Frankfurt's 30-share Boersen-Zeitung index opened 0.4 points higher at 295.86 while Amsterdam's CBS all-share index opened 0.5 points higher at 84.4.

Hong Kong's Hang Seng index rose 32.4 points to close at 2,623.75 and Singapore shares edged higher.

Texas official offers to cut oil output by 10pc

HOUSTON, April 25. (Reuters): Texas Railroad Commissioner Kent Hance, who will attend this week's meeting of Opec and non-Opec oil producers in Vienna, said on Friday Texas might help boost oil prices by cutting output up to 10 per cent.

The commission regulates Texas oil production, which totals about two million barrels per day.

Hance said he met Opec president Rihwan Lukman in London earlier this month and discussed the possibility of Texas taking part in the effort of the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries to boost world oil prices by reducing output.

Suggestion Hance, who was speaking on Friday to the Petroleum Equipment Suppliers Association annual meeting, did not say how the Opec president reacted to his suggestion at their meeting.

In the past, US Department of Energy has firmly ruled out any participation in manipulating the world oil market.

But because the Texas Railroad Commission is responsible for conserving the state's resources, it could order production cutbacks in the name of conservation, Hance said.

The commission sets the amount of oil to be produced each month from all Texas oil wells. From the 1930s to the early 1970s, its decisions on statewide production quotas essentially determined world oil prices.

The Railroad Commission has sought official observer status to attend all Opec meetings, Hance said.

He says his cutback proposals have broad grassroots support. One Texas oilman, he said, told him he would "rather have 90 per cent of $20 than 100 per cent of $13, referring to the price of a barrel of oil."

US warns of environmental dangers resulting from big loans

WASHINGTON, April 25. (AP): Pending loans totalling more than $3 billion aimed at raising living standards in 20 countries also may harm people in those countries and damage their natural resources, a government agency says.

Of particular concern are projects that would dam big rivers in the tropics, build roads into undeveloped parts of the world or try to develop rural areas, according to the US Agency for International Development.

US law requires the agency to draw up a list of loans proposed by international lending institutions and which it considers dangerous, and distribute it to members of those institutions - such as Japan and Western European countries.

Loans An advance copy obtained by the Associated Press indicated 31 such loans in the planning stage would dole out at least $3 billion - and possibly much more.

No estimates were available for five of the loans. Others were earmarked for major projects on which the banks already have made loans and may make more in the future.

The United States is the biggest contributor to the World Bank, which is a major source of such loans to poor countries.

One of the biggest World Bank loans on the list would provide $420 million for a dam on India's Narmada river, second only to the Ganges in sacredness to Hindus. The dam eventually would displace 120,000 people, irrigate 300,000 hectares (about 720,000 acres) of land and generate 1,000 megawatts of electricity.

Project The agency says the project also could increase the risk of earthquakes, of waterlogging the soil and of transmitting waterborne diseases including malaria and cholera. There would be 40,000 hectares (96,000 acres) cleared of forest and submerged.

"We continue to have concerns about this project and will pursue them again with (World) Bank management as one of our top priorities to see what actions to address our concerns will be taken," the agency said.

But it added: "We do not consider the list all-inclusive."

Six of the loans would go to Indonesia, including one for $120 million to assist in an Indonesian government effort that has moved over 1.2 million families out of the overpopulated islands of Java and Bali. The US agency says it is worried about insufficient help to people being moved, displacement of those who already live near the new settlements, danger to water supply and to wildlife.

Support Another controversial project involves the World Bank's continued support for a major overhaul of Brazil's electric power system. This would include a loan of $500 million.

The agency says it is concerned about the impact on Brazil's Indian populations and its "sensitive ecosystem." British and West German officials joined the Americans in talking to the bank's management in January, and were told that the loan had been delayed until September or October, mostly for economic reasons.

Trade bill veto threat 'a mistake'

WASHINGTON, April 25. (Reuters): President Reagan is making a serious mistake by threatening to veto a sweeping trade bill as Congress would be unlikely to pass another version this year, the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee said yesterday.

Senator Lloyd Bentsen, in a television interview, criticised the administration's stance as the Senate prepared to vote this week, possibly on Tuesday, on a trade bill approved 312-107 by the House of Representatives last Thursday.

The White House says the President will not sign the bill into law, partly because he objects to a provision requiring 60 days' advance notice of major plant closings and layoffs.

The bill, three years in the making, is intended to open foreign markets to US goods by requiring retaliation against countries that violate international trade pacts. It also includes measures for retraining US workers who lose their jobs because of import competition and gives more bargaining authority to the US trade representative.

Congressional leaders say the bill is essential to help lower the US deficit on trade with the rest of the world, which exceeded $170 billion last year.

"I think it's a high-risk policy to risk the entire trade bill over this one issue (60 days' notice)," said Bentsen, who led Senate negotiations with House members that led to the sweeping 1,100-page trade bill.

"You have hundreds of issues, many things involved in there for American workers and American business, and we're trying to turn this trade deficit around," Bentsen said.

Surpluses "To risk it all on this one issue that's a commonsense issue, that's a humane policy. I think is a serious mistake."

In response to questions, Bentsen said it was outrageous for Japan to claim the trade proposals were racist because they aim at lowering Japan's surplus on trade.

He said Japan spent an estimated $60 million lobbying against the bill in Washington last year and that countries with trade surpluses like Japan and West Germany would rejoice if it was vetoed by the President.

If the President vetoes the bill, Bentsen said, Congress "would have a very difficult time and it's high risk whether we can (pass a new bill) this year."

Congress can override a presidential veto with a two-thirds vote in each House.

IDB lends to Pakistan, Tunis

BAHRAIN, April 25. (Reuters): The Islamic Development Bank (IDB) signed an agreement at its headquarters in Jeddah on Sunday to lend Pakistan $20 million to import palm oil, an IDB statement said.

It also signed an agreement to lend Tunis $37 million to import chemicals.

Japan making strides to halt technology violations

TOKYO, April 25. (AP): Japan has made great strides in trying to prevent sales of banned high technology items to Soviet bloc countries, but there still is a potential for further violations, a US State Department official said yesterday.

Allan Wendt, senior representative for strategic technology policy, spent two days discussing issues related to the coordinating committee for export to Communist nations (Cocom), which governs the sales of restricted items by Western countries.

The talks included Japanese concerns that the US Congress will retaliate against Toshiba Machine Co. for selling banned equipment to the Soviet Union that enabled the Soviets to build quieter submarines, Wendt said.

Improvements The two sides also discussed improvements in the Japanese export system, cooperation in implementing export controls and cooperative areas of enforcement, plus streamlining control lists, cooperation from third countries and the liberalisation of export controls for China.

Wendt said Japan has enacted a new law that toughens the penalties against violators, and said 2,200 Japanese companies have established internal controls to prevent further violations.

"I certainly hope there will never be another Toshiba machine-type case, which everyone knows was an egregious violation," he said. "I think there will continue to be violations of the Cocom rules. I think it would be unrealistic not to expect violations... human greed has been with us for a long time and is unlikely to disappear," he said.

Gulf Bank weekly market review

KD firm against GCC currencies

Kuwaiti dinar
BASED on opening middle market FX rates, the KD exchange rate was firmer against US dollar ending the week at 273.26 fils compared with its week before last closing of 274.83 fils. Against the pound sterling, the KD was easier ending at 515.86 fils compared with its week before last closing of 506.46 fils.

The KD was slightly easier against the DM ending the week at 163.82 fils compared with its week before last closing of 162.43 fils.

The KD ended the week easier against the SFR closing at 198.35 compared with its week before last closing at 196.10 fils. As against the Jordanian dinar, the KD firmer, ending the week lower at 796.21 fils compared with its week before last closing of 799.27 fils. The KD was slightly firmer against the GCC currencies.

World stocks
Wall Street stock prices weakened over last week as the Midwest clash between the US and Iran disturbed investors and there was no new developments to stir the market with the dollar being directionless, providing little guidance.

Prices fell through the 2000 level before recovering later in the week on futures-related programme activity.

The Dow Jones Industrial Average opened the week at 2000 and closed at 2015, near the previous week's closing level of 2014.

Shares prices on the London Stock Exchange fluctuated over last week and ended lower on recently reduced bid activity, little hope of a cut in UK base rates following worse-than-expected UK March bank lending and money supply data which pointed to inflationary pressure building up in the UK economy, and fears of possible large rights issues in the new account all weighed heavily on market sentiment.

The FTSE-100 opened the week at 1788 and closed at 1776, unchanged from its previous week's closing.

US dollar
The US dollar was generally mixed against other major currencies and traded in a narrow range except against the pound sterling which surged against the US$ to its highest level since 1981.

The Fed is said to have intervened with Bank of England to support the dollar.

The rising tensions in the Gulf between the US and Iran, the market speculation of a higher US interest rates, and fear of Central Bank intervention has kept a floor under the dollar whereas the dollar upward move was also limited by the widening US Fed trade deficit and lack of investor interest.

The dollar slightly firmer close of the week was attributed to technical factors rather than fundamentals.

Given the inaction on the dollar from the market attention focused on the higher yielding currencies like the sterling, Australian dollar (which reached its 2-1/2 year high against US dollar at 75.34 cents), and the Canadian dollar (which reached its 3-year high against US dollar at 81.12 cents).

Fed Vice Chairman Manuel Johnson's remarks slightly boosted the dollar as he said the Fed has adjusted its current policy to be more responsive to economic developments.

The US dollar wasn't responsive to data showing increased inflation as evidenced by US March consumer price index which rose above market expectation by 0.5 per cent and stood 3.9 per cent above a year ago level after a 0.2 per cent rise in Feb with advances in apparel, food, transportation and energy prices responsible for the rise.

Japanese yen
The Japanese yen tone remained strong though it was locked in a narrow trading range against the US dollar opening the week at 124.20/30 yen and ending the week at 124.75/85 yen slightly lower compared to its week before last closing of 123.90/00 yen. The market was cautious on possible concerted central banks intervention.

Bank of Japan allowed seasonal rise in its one-month and two-month commercial bill rates. Sumita, governor of the Bank of Japan, said that current FX rates are basically stable despite the renewed dollar weakness lately.

Deutsche mark
The mark was mostly stable against US dollar opening the week at 1.6600/10 marks but ended slightly easier at 1.6745/55 marks around its week before last closing of 1.6620/30 mark.

The mark resumed its weaker tone against the pound sterling closing the week at 3.157/60 marks compared to its week before last closing at 3.133/136 despite Bank of England intervention to put a cap on sterling's rise.

Now dealers are looking at 3.20 mark level after 3.15 level was breached. The Bundesbank left its credit policies unchanged after its weekly regular meeting.

The Bundesbank viewed the overshooting of its M3 money aggregate growth which is running well above its 3-6 per cent target at around 8-1/4 per cent in Jan and Feb, as being non-inflationary as the acceleration is a result of the country's current account surplus and capital inflows from abroad attracted by the strong mark.

Pound sterling
The pound opened the week at its highest level against the US dollar since 1981 at $1.9000/10 but closed easier at $1.8855/65, unchanged from the week before last closing level. The pound also broke through the $1.5 marks level. The pound was mainly supported by relatively high UK interest rates, the lack of investor appetite for dollars, and reduced chances of a near-term cut in UK base rates.

Swiss franc
The Swiss franc opened the week at the same level of the week before last closing of SF1.3725/35 and closed lower at SF1.3850/60.

Oil prices
Oil prices in the world markets increased last week. Spot prices for North Sea Brent crude were between $16.60 - 17.80 range compared with $15.50-16.80 range recorded the week before last. Prices for May cargoes were higher too, ranging between $16.65-17.35 compared with $15.55-16.90 range recorded the week before last.

This improvement in oil prices for the second week is attributed mainly to the move made lately by the Opec price monitoring committee to hold a joint meeting in Vienna today with representatives of seven non-Opec oil exporting countries to discuss measures aiming at stabilising oil prices.

Gold
Gold bullion prices opened the week higher at $459.25/$459.75 and closed lower at $449/$449.50 showing a loss of $7 over the previous week's closing of $456/$456.50. Gold continued to lose ground over the week to end below $450. According to the chairman and chief executive officer of Homestake Mining Co., the cost of putting new US gold mines into operation is going up after years of declines.

Banks urged to boost lending to indebted Arab countries

This is the second part of the article "Arabs introduce debt management strategies." The first part of the article appeared in the Arab Times on April 25, Monday.

The growing size of Arab external debt since the early 1970s is indicative of the widening gap between the countries' export earnings and their import requirements. The level of Arab indebtedness has also increased in dollar terms during the last three years with the US currency losing close to 50 per cent of its value against some of the currencies in which Arab countries have chosen to borrow.

At the same time, net new lending has contracted from $4.2 billion in 1982 to $3.0 billion in 1986. Substantial principal repayments have been made during this period with gross disbursements static at around $10 billion annually.

Ability

Various indicators may be considered when assessing the ability of a country to borrow externally. These are: (a) Solvency indicators which reflect the structural strength and overall stability of the economy (debt/GDP and debt/export earnings); and (b) Liquidity indicators (debt service ratio, reserves in months of import coverage and liquidity gap ratio), measures the adequacy of a country's export earnings and its international reserves to meet its current external obligations, principally to pay for its imports and service in debt.

The debt service ratio is defined as total debt service payments (actual payment of principal plus interest) to earning from exports of goods and services (current account earnings).

The liquidity gap ratio is defined as the ratio of short-term debt less current account deficit to export earnings.

The Arab debt burden has been steadily increasing in the eighties. Between 1982-1986 the average ratio of total external debt to gross national product for the group of highly indebted Arab countries rose from 47.4 per cent, well into the high range by conventional standards.

Earnings
Another solvency indicator, the average ratio of debt to current account earnings, was also on the rise for the group of indebted Arab countries. This ratio rose from an acceptable 179 per cent in 1982 to a poor 203 per cent in 1984 and to a critical 365 per cent in 1986. Slow growth and lower invisible earnings in the form of workers' remittances and official transfers have undermined current account revenues in the last few years and contributed to the high debt to current account ratios of several indebted Arab countries.

While the solvency indicators point to a rising debt burden for certain high indebted Arab countries as well as for the group as a whole, the overwhelming official and concessional nature of Arab external debt has resulted in a relatively low, albeit increasing, debt servicing burden.

Reserves
In addition, the emergence of official debt management strategies (rescheduling) and unofficial ones (arrears build-up) have considerably eased the Arab debt burden.

The other liquidity indicators are the ratio of foreign reserves to average monthly import coverage and liquidity gap ratio. Based on IMF statistics, by the end of 1987 most of the Arab countries had enough reserves to cover more than two months of import cover.

Only four countries had a liquidity gap ratio higher than 60 indicating that the region's short term debt is still manageable. Given the debt profile levels outstanding by the end of 1986, last year marked the peak of debt servicing burden for the Arab debtor countries as a whole.

After reaching $14.8 billion in 1987, debt service is projected by the World Bank to decline to $14.5 billion in 1988 and $14.4 billion in 1989. By 1991, total debt service for the group will be stored to the 1986 level of 10.6 billion.

For the Arab debtor countries as a whole external debt is primarily of a long term nature. In 1986, 82.5 per cent of total external debt was long term, 15.3 per cent was short term and 2.2 per cent was IMF credit (less than 18 months), all close to the average for the 1982-1986 period.

Lower

Moreover, this long term debt is primarily public or publicly guaranteed debt, with private non-guaranteed debt practically non-existent. In 1986 only $1.3 billion was private non-guaranteed long term debt and was mainly accounted for in Egypt, Morocco and Tunisia.

According to the Unified Arab Monetary Report published by the Arab Monetary Fund in 1988, total loans extended to the Arab debtor countries from official sources reached $37.1 billion during the period 1980-1985, with a yearly average of $6.18 billion, slightly lower than the yearly average of $6.18 billion slightly lower than the yearly average of $6.40 billion during the period 1975-1979. Saudi Arabia was the largest creditor accounting for an average of around 69 per cent of the total, followed by Kuwait (20 per cent), UAE (6.3 per cent) and Qatar (1.5 per cent). Bilateral aid and loans were by far larger than those offered by the multilateral development institutions, accounting for an average of around 83.4 per cent of total soft loans extended.

What characterises transfers from official Arab sources is their soft term nature. Close to 50 per cent of the credit extended is in the form of aid and grants while the loan portion of these transfers is of a concessional nature to be repaid over periods ranging between 10 and 20 years with interest rates far below the commercial levels.

Among the Arab countries receiving subsidised loans from the various Arab development Funds, Jordan was the largest borrower drawing close to $1.6 billion by the end of 1986 or 12.5 per cent of the total loans extended. Morocco came next with $1.4 per cent of the total, Tunisia (11 per cent), South Yemen (9.9 per cent), Algeria (8.4 per cent), Sudan (8.3 per cent) and Syria (6.1 per cent).

While the short-term outlook for the highly indebted Arab countries remains bleak, the longer term prospects are more encouraging especially if the required structural adjustments are implemented.

A global recession is not expected in 1988, nevertheless economic activities will be less robust than in the previous two years, and the possibility of a worldwide economic slowdown looms higher for 1989.

Demand for oil, agricultural products, phosphates and other commodities that generate most of the indebted Arab countries' export revenues will again be restricted by global conditions.

The US dollar, the currency in which most of these exports are denominated, has not yet bottomed and is expected to weaken further in the course of 1988.

Lending

Arab banks and financial institutions are being called upon to increase their lending to the indebted Arab countries to help them service their debt and cover additional financing requirements.

It is doubtful whether the major Arab international banks would be able to contribute much more in this respect.

To stem capital flight, considered an important cause of external Arab debt, the indebted Arab countries need to provide a stable political and economic environment and reduce domestic uncertainties.

An over-valued exchange rate makes foreign assets seem cheap, raises the risk of devaluation of national currencies and encourages capital outflow. High inflation rates create uncertainty as well, which together with repressive interest rate policy render real interest rates low or even negative.

Eliminating fiscal deficits and maintaining positive real interest rate and realistic foreign exchange policy will go a long way towards reducing capital flight and provide a substitute for foreign borrowing.

STEIN SCORES TWICE FOR NEW CHAMPIONS

Luton edge past Arsenal for Cup

LONDON, April 25, (Reuters): Unfashionable Luton Town won the first major trophy in their 103-year history when they beat holders Arsenal 3-2 in the English League Cup soccer final yesterday.

In a dramatic and highly entertaining match, Luton took a one goal lead, fell 2-1 behind in the second half, but fought back to clinch the Cup with a last minute goal.

Former England striker Brian Stein opened the scoring after 13 minutes and also grabbed the decisive goal seconds from the finish to crown a tremendous personal performance.

Equalised

Arsenal, who only played in the manner of holders and hot favourites for a 10 minute spell midway through the second period, equalised after 71 minutes through substitute Martin Hayes.

Three minutes later striker Alan Smith put them ahead for the first time and it seemed Luton's hopes would be ended when Arsenal were awarded a penalty in the 79th minute.

Luton's reserve goalkeeper Andy Dibble pulled off a brilliant save from Nigel Winterburn's spot kick, however, to revive his injury-hit team.

From then until the final whistle they took control with Northern Irish international midfielder Danny Wilson equalising in the 82nd minute to set up the dramatic finale when Stein volleyed the winner.

Luton's preparations for the final had been upset by several injuries, including the loss of stalwart midfielder Darren McDermott only 24 hours before the match. But they made light of these setbacks in the first half when they produced an incisive and controlled performance of which Brian Stein anticipated. Stein finished with the crisp and accurate low shot.

Arsenal laboured in midfield to regain control but could do little to prevent Luton from carving out several further opportunities early in the second half when winger Kingsley Black began to take the game by storm.

From a Black cross, Harford headed narrowly wide and then from a Harford cross, Stein forced a brilliant save from John Lukic.

But Luton were unable to score again in this spell and Harford limped off injured after 57 minutes to hand Arsenal the psychological advantage.

Luton substitute Mark Stein, younger brother of Brian, almost scored with his first real touch, but shot over the bar, and Arsenal responded with a period of convincing pressure.

They equalised when Foster failed to clear a free kick from Paul Davis and Hayes scrambled a loose ball into the net.

Three minutes afterwards, Smith ran onto a pass from midfielder Michael Thomas to put them ahead and leave Luton staring at what seemed an imminent defeat.

Smith twice hit the woodwork with headers before the penalty award which looked to have shut Luton out.

When Dibble saved the spot-kick Luton recovered their spirits and drew level with eight minutes remaining. Arsenal defender Gus Caesar, playing in place of injured captain David O'Leary, was dispossessed by Mark Stein. Black crossed from the left, a Brian Stein shot was blocked but from the rebound he crossed again for Wilson to stoop and head in.

With only seconds remaining, Luton's second substitute, Ashley Grimes, made space on the right and crossed with his left foot for Brian Stein to volley the winner.

Dibble said of the vital penalty: "I made up my mind to go to the left and I guessed correctly. I hand't got it right the last couple of penalties but I'm over the moon."

Ray Harford, the Luton manager, added: "I thought it wasn't to be when they got the penalty. Winning our first major trophy means we're now a big club."

Teams:

Arsenal — John Lukic, Nigel Winterburn, Kenny Sansom, Michael Thomas, Gus Caesar, Tony Adams, David Rocastle, Paul Davis, Alan Smith, Perry Groves (Martin Hayes 60th min), Kevin Richardson.

Real clinch Spanish crown

MADRID, April 25, (Reuters): Real Madrid clinched their 23rd Spanish soccer championship and their third in succession yesterday with a 6-0 mauling of relegation-threatened Real Betis.

The easy victory before 80,000 delighted fans at their Bernabeu stadium leaves Real with an unassailable 11-point lead over second-placed Real Sociedad with four games to go in the First Division.

Dumped

And it will make amends for Real's disappointing goalless draw with Dutch side PSV Eindhoven on Wednesday which dumped the Spaniards out of the European Cup.

Real Sociedad, coached by Briton John Toshack, lost 1-0 at home to Murcia.

It was Murcia's first win over Real Sociedad in San Sebastian.

Real Madrid's Ricardo Gallego, who dribbled past two players outside the penalty area and shot powerfully home off the left post in the 20th minute.

Manuel Sanchis scored the second five minutes later, and Rafael Gordillo added to the desperation of Real Betis' goalkeeper Salva Navarro with a powerful left-foot volley in the 36th.

Michel Gonzalez scored two more in the 41st and 68th minutes and helped Mexican striker Hugo Sanchez score his 28th goal of the season in the 55th minute.

But the victory was marred by a nasty collision between Miguel Tendillo and Miguel Chendo, who were among nine Real players named for Spain's European Championship warm-up match against Scotland on Wednesday.

Real doctor Jose "Pirri" Martinez said Chendo could miss the rest of the season while Tendillo looked doubtful for Wednesday.

Yugoslav Bogdan Korak snatched Murcia's winner nine minutes from time against Real Sociedad. But the win still leaves the Basques one point short of qualifying for next year's UEFA Cup.

Atletico Madrid kept alive their hopes of finishing in the top four and gaining a place in the UEFA Cup next season, drawing 1-1 away at Sevilla.

Atletico, third-placed behind Real Sociedad, remain equal on points with Athletic Bilbao, but ahead on goal difference.

Portuguese striker Paulo Futre set up the Atletico Madrid goal for Eusebio Sacristan to drive home in the 16th minute.

Cholo Ruiz squeezed the ball past two defenders and the goalkeeper with a nicely-angled shot to equalise for Sevilla 18 minutes later.

Striker

Barcelona put on the pressure too late and were held to a 1-1 draw away at Valladolid.

Valladolid striker Manuel Pena tricked international goalkeeper Andoni Zubizarreta off his line and lobbed in the first goal.

England striker Gary Lineker equalised for Barcelona with a penalty in the second half.

Groningen beat PSV in League game

AMSTERDAM, April 25, (Reuters): European Cup finalists PSV Eindhoven, already First Division champions and with an eye on tomorrow's Dutch Cup semifinal, left out several key players and lost 2-0 at FC Groningen yesterday.

With goalkeeper Hans van Breukelen, Wim Kieft, Dane Soren Lerby and Belgian Erik Gerets all missing, PSV looked sluggish and missed a number of chances early on.

Groningen had no problems in containing PSV's uninspired attacks and opened the scoring with a goal by Barend Beltman just before half-time.

Gary Brooke netted the second from the penalty spot after Jos Roosen was fouled by PSV's Patrick Lodewijks.

Reach

PSV, who knocked out Spain's Real Madrid last Wednesday to reach the European Cup final, meet RKC for a place in the Dutch Cup final.

Ajax Amsterdam, who reached the final of the European Cup Winner's Cup last Wednesday, beat Feyenoord Rotterdam 3-1.

Ajax opened the scoring with a free kick from Arnold Muhren midway through the first half but Feyenoord's Andre Koekstra slammed home an equaliser within a minute.

Ajax took control in the second half with goals from Henrie Meijer and John Bosman.

Benfica lose as Porto widen gap

LISBON, April 25, (Reuters): European Cup finalists Benfica slumped to a 1-0 defeat at lowly Farense yesterday, allowing Porto to open a virtually unassailable eight-point gap at the top of the Portuguese First Division.

An 81st minute shot by Rui Barros from a penalty rebound gave Porto a 1-0 victory at Chaves and, with only seven matches remaining, they now look set to recapture the title.

Second-placed Benfica rested most of their regulars after their brilliant 2-0 win over Romania's Steaua Bucharest last Wednesday, a victory which took the Portuguese champions to their first European Cup final in 20 years.

Struggling to avoid relegation, Farense took quick advantage of Benfica's weakened defence with Ademir shooting home in the 14th minute after a goalmouth scramble.

Benfica staged a late rally but failed to score and will now concentrate all their efforts on winning the European cup, as their rivals Porto did last season.

Sporting Lisbon beat Setubal 2-0, to move into a distant third place, with a goal in each half from Paulinho Cascaavel and Lima. Setubal, lying sixth, still have a chance of a place in Europe.

AC Milan step up Italian title bid

ROME, April 25, (Reuters): AC Milan, spurred by Dutch international Ruud Gullit, stepped up their Italian Soccer League title bid with a 2-0 win against Internazionale, to move within a point of leaders Napoli yesterday.

While Diego Maradona's Napoli were held 1-1 at Verona, goals from Gullit and Antonio Virdis sealed Milan's supremacy in a classic derby watched by 80,000 fans in the San Siro stadium they share with Inter.

Excitement

Milan's victory put them closer on the heels of defending champions Napoli than ever before this season and rose the excitement level for the clash of the championship when the two teams meet in Naples next Sunday.

Napoli, who were four points clear of sole challengers Milan only three matches ago, now have 42 points to Milan's 41.

Roma, held 0-0 at Pescara, and Sampdoria, who drew 2-2 against Juventus, lie third and fourth respectively and are both an unbridgeable eight points behind the leaders with three matches left this season.

only twice this season, dominated their match against Internazionale from the opening whistle.

But it took Dutchman Gullit, Europe's Footballer of the Year, until one minute from the interval to open the scoring with a low, diagonal shot.

Virdis, recently back from a long injury lay-off, scored the second in the 53rd minute when a disastrous mix-up by Inter's Riccardo Ferri and Argentine Daniel Passarella allowed him to slip through and shoot past keeper Walter Zenga.

Napoli had looked similarly dominant at Verona, where a rocket of a shot from Maradona put the champions 1-0 ahead in the 26th minute.

But Verona, 3-0 winners in the same clash last season, fought back in the second half and secured a deserved equaliser in the 66th minute when defender Roberto Galia headed home from a corner.

Police said seven fans were treated before the match for knife wounds and six others detained for various offences.

Napoli, beaten 3-1 by Juventus last week, face tough contests against Milan, Fiorentina and Sampdoria before the season closes on May 15.

Yesterday, Juventus did well to salvage a draw after a penalty converted by Fulvio Bonomi and a shot by Italian international Gianluca Vialli left them 2-0 down to Sampdoria 40 minutes into the game.

Renato Buso pulled one back for Juventus in the 44th with Gaetano Scirea adding the Equaliser on the final whistle.

Vital

The one point lifted Juventus from seventh to sixth on 28 points, ahead of Inter, and was vital to their chances of a place in Europe next season.

Juventus, last absent from European club competition in 1962-63, must finish in the top six to qualify for the UEFA Cup, the only tournament still open to them after Torino knocked them out of the Italian Cup in mid-week.

Madrid race

MADRID, Spain, April 25, (AP): Juan Antonio Garcia of Spain won the Madrid marathon yesterday competing with more than 3,000 runners.

He covered the 42.125 kilometres in two hours, 14 minutes and 32 seconds, a record for the Madrid marathon. The previous record was set by his countryman Ramiro Matamoros in 2:17:04, in 1986.

Czaslana Nentlewiecz of Poland won the women's marathon in 2:37:19, setting a record. The previous record was set by Spain's Mercedes Calleja in 2:41:46, last year.

Cooper scores one-stroke victory

MADRID, April 25, (Reuters): Unheralded Briton Derrick Cooper pulled off his first major victory — the third player to do so in the new European season — when he took the Madrid Open golf championship by one stroke yesterday.

Cooper held off the challenge of five Spaniards over the final round and also upstaged Severiano Ballesteros, who is still finding his consistently best form elusive.

The 32-year-old club professional from Warrington in the north of England had six birdies and an eagle in a final 68 for a 13-under-par 275 total, securing his first win in 16 years as a pro and earning £33,000 ($62,040).

Cooper edged Spaniards Manuel Pinero, triple winner of the event who had a closing 71, and Miguel Martin (70) into joint second place on 276.

Further

Ballesteros, twice Madrid champion, shot 72 and finished fourth, two strokes further back. His £10,000 ($18,800) prize took him to the top of the European money-winners list.

Cooper, who has twice finished fourth in major events, was lifted by an eagle three at the 15th, where he hit a five-iron to 12 feet, and a birdie three at the next.

Pinero and Martin came to the last needing a birdie four to force a playoff but each failed to get one.

Cooper said: "I felt if David Whelan and David Llewellyn could win the Barcelona and Biarritz Opens this year, why not me. I've been a bit too soft in the brain but I've been playing well and I used a new putter I picked in my shop as I left for Spain. It spurred me on, having all the people cheering for the Spaniards."

Committee to investigate Budd's eligibility to run for Britain

LONDON, April 25, (Reuters): British athletics governing body delayed an immediate decision on South African-born runner Zola Budd yesterday, instead setting up a committee of inquiry to investigate her eligibility to run for Britain.

The British Amateur Athletic Board (BAAB) announced its action after meeting for two and a half hours to discuss the April 16 directive by the International Amateur Athletic Federation (IAAF) to ban the 21-year-old athlete for 12 months.

The IAAF called for the ban because of Budd's involvement in an athletics meeting in South Africa last year.

Decision

The BAAB said a three-member committee, under an independent chairman, would report back on May 21 after hearing evidence from Budd.

This date means the BAAB's decision must come after the one-month deadline set by the IAAF to take action.

Budd will be asked not to take part in competitions under international rules while the committee carries out its investigation.

The IAAF has said that if Budd is not banned it will consider suspending the BAAB, which would mean British athletes being barred from international competition, including the Seoul Olympics later this year.

A brief statement was read to a press conference by BAAB spokesman Tony Ward, who said that in setting up the committee of inquiry the board was not making a decision straightaway on Budd's eligibility.

The committee will have one member nominated by the English Women's Amateur Athletic Association, one by the Men's Amateur Athletic Association and an independent chairman.

"The inquiry will be carried out, properly and in accordance with natural justice," Ward said. "Miss Budd and her advisers will be given an opportunity to appear before the committee and to give evidence."

The IAAF insisted yesterday that it had not lifted its threat to ban British athletes from international competition, including September's Seoul Olympics.

IAAF secretary John Holt said the IAAF stood by the directive it issued last weekend that BAAB should impose a 12-month ban on Budd or risk being suspended itself.

"The matter will be considered under rule 11, which says that the IAAF has the power to caution, censure or suspend the British Board," Holt said from Lausanne.

Holt's comment plunged Britain's athletics crisis over Budd deeper into confusion after it took a mysterious new twist earlier in the day.

BAAB officials clearly thought the threat of a ban had been withdrawn when they met to consider the IAAF's ruling Budd.

BAAB officials learned during the week that the IAAF's original resolution had changed and a crucial paragraph which threatened suspension had been altered in the revised resolution.

"We have absolutely no idea when or why it was changed," said Tony Ward yesterday. "But it means the IAAF have lifted their threat of suspension of the board over this issue."

The IAAF are reported to have claimed that the original resolution was incorrect because of a clerical error.

Budd, two time world cross-country champion, has been dogged by controversy since arriving in Britain in March 1984 and being granted British citizenship within two weeks.

She was involved in a collision with American Mary Decker in the Olympic 3,000 metres final and met with more upset six months later when she was forced off the course by anti-apartheid demonstrators at the English Cross-country Championships.

Her failure to meet residential qualifications led to her being banned from competing at the 1986 Edinburgh Commonwealth Games. She was also forced to withdraw from this year's World Cross-country Championships in New Zealand after pressure from the IAAF and boycott threats from some African countries.

She is now alleged to have violated IAAF rules by attending races in Brakpan and Randfontein last year.

Meanwhile, Budd described herself as a "political pawn," as confusion deepened surrounding her athletics future.

Budd said she was "very disappointed," that she would not be able to compete for a month following her suspension by BAAB. "I have been a political pawn," she said. "I want to clear my name as soon as possible and want the whole thing cleared up as quickly as possible."

Her coach John Bryant declared that he was encouraged by the day's developments. "I don't think the world looks as black as it did this time last week," said Bryant.

Budd was also in a "much more positive frame, of mind than she was last weekend," he said.

He welcomed the BAAB's creation of the committee of inquiry to probe allegations she took part in athletics meetings in South Africa last year.

"Any inquiry which is going to get at the truth has got to be good news and the fuller it is, the less of a case there will be to answer. There isn't any new evidence that Zola can fear," Bryant said.

"I don't know what's going to happen and I'm not in the business of making predictions. But we won't give up the fight."

Hunt goes out to young Pakistani

PARIS, April 25, (Reuters): Australian veteran Geoff Hunt, eight times British Open champion, succumbed to youth in the second round of the Paris Open Squash Championship yesterday when he lost 9-2, 9-7, 5-9, 0-10 to Pakistan's Zarak Jahan Khan.

The 40-year-old former world champion caused a major upset on Saturday when he defeated virus-suffering compatriot Rodney Martin, beaten in last week's British Open final, in straight games.

But Hunt was no match for Zarak, 20 years his junior, and the Australian made a string of unforced errors in the second game before losing a commanding lead.

Hunt threatened briefly in the third when Zarak relaxed. But he could not sustain the challenge and the Pakistani crushed him in the fourth game to complete victory in 75 minutes.

Easier

"I was surprised how fit Geoff was," Zarak said afterwards. "I thought I'd win much easier. He still could beat a lot of young players."

Reigning world champion and top seed Jansher Khan of Pakistan continued his smooth passage towards the final with a 9-6, 9-2, 9-7 win over England's Geoff Williams. He meets former world champion Ross Norman of New Zealand in the quarterfinals.

Second seed Chris Dittmar of Australia also eased through with victory over an Englishman. His victim was Del Harris, beaten 9-5, 2-9, 9-1, 9-5.

But seventh seed Tristan Nanarow, the volatile Australian, was the major casualty of the round when he crashed out 9-10, 9-2, 9-3, 9-5 to rising compatriot Rodney Eyles.

Schueler wins 50km race walk

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., April 25, (Reuters): Veteran Carl Schueler won a 50 km race walk yesterday by more than five minutes to earn a spot on the US Olympic team for the Summer Games in Seoul.

Taking the lead from the start, the 32-year-old national champion was clocked in three hours, 57 minutes and 48 seconds to qualify for the Olympics for the third time.

Quality

Marco Evoniuk, 30, the US record holder for 50 km, was second in 4:03.33 to also qualify for his third Olympics. Newcomer Andy Kaestner made his first Olympic team with a personal record of 4:05:07.

Sixteen walkers in the record field of 22 went the distance. Schueler, sixth in the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics, became the favourite after winning the 50 km nationals in February.

PAKISTAN LOSE QUICK WICKETS

Marshall puts W.Indies in control

BRIDGETOWN, Barbados, April 25. (Agencies): Malcolm Marshall struck 48 and then took three wickets for only 26 runs as West Indies fought back to take control of the third and final Test yesterday.

Marshall first dismissed Rameez Raja with the score only six and then took the prize wicket of Javed Miandad and Aamir Malik as Pakistan slumped from 153 for three to 177 for six by the close of the third day's game.

Dismissed Marshall earlier influenced a significant tail-end flourish in which West Indies, 226 for eight overnight, added a further 80 runs in even time before they were dismissed for 306 — three behind on first innings.

Pakistan, who lead 1-0 in the series, had 30 minutes batting before lunch in which they scored 16 for one.

Marshall's main ally with the bat was fellow paceman Winston Benjamin, and the pair extended their ninth wicket stand to 58 with some exhilarating shots against Imran Khan and Wasim Akram when they took the second new ball.

Marshall greeted it with two

Marshall: three for 26

cover-driven fours in the first over from Wasim, and both batsmen scored so freely that 52 had been added off 4.4 overs with the new ball when Marshall was dismissed.

He tried to steer a wide delivery from Imran and edged the ball to stand-in wicketkeeper Aamir Malik, deputising for Salim Yousuf, who fractured his nose when he was struck by a Marshall bouncer on Friday.

Marshall's 62-ball innings — he hit six fours and a six that was square-cut off Wasim — was followed by further free hitting from Benjamin and Courtney Walsh until the former was run out for 31 trying to steal a second run.

Imran ended with three for 108, lifting his tally for the series to 23 wickets, and Akram had three for 88.

After Pakistan lost Rameez Raja in the innings, Mudassar Nazar and Shoaib Mohammed repaired the damage by putting on 94 for the second wicket.

But shortly before tea, Mudassar was caught off a delivery from off-spinner Carl Hooper that bounced and took the shoulder of the bat to lob up to Gordon Greenidge at slip. Mudassar made 41, his highest of the series in which Pakistan lead 1-0.

But after the fall of Shoaib at 153, Pakistan seemed to wilt under pressure from the West Indian bowlers. Pakistan lost four wickets for only 16 runs, including three for only four runs, before Imran and Wasim prevented further damage before the close.

Boston cruise past Milwaukee

NEW YORK, April 25. (AP): When Roger Clemens is on the mound, the Milwaukee Brewers see nothing but trouble.

Clemens pitched a three-hitter and shut out Milwaukee for the third consecutive time as Boston won its fifth straight game, 4-0 at County stadium yesterday.

Clemens, 4-0, beat the Brewers 2-0 on April 14 at Boston and 4-0 on the last day of the 1987 season.

Elsewhere in the AL it was Kansas City 3, Baltimore 1; Minnesota 13, Cleveland 7; Oakland 5, Chicago 3; Texas 4, Detroit 2; and Seattle 4, California 2.

The Red Sox scored two runs in the second off Teddy Higuera on sacrifice flies by Todd Benizger and Rick Cerone. Boston added two runs in the ninth on RBI-singles by Marty Barrett and Mike Greenwell.

The five strikeouts moved Clemens into a tie with Lefty Grove for 10th place on the all-time Red Sox career list with 743.

Royals 3, Orioles 1

Baltimore dropped to 0-18 and stumbled closer to the worst losing streak in baseball history as Kansas City's Bret Saberhagen pitched a six-hitter.

The Orioles' losing streak is the longest in the majors since the Detroit Tigers dropped 19 straight in 1975 and tied the fifth-longest in American League history. The Philadelphia Athletics in 1920 and the Washington Senators in 1948 and '59 also lost 18 straight.

The modern Major League mark is 23, set by the Philadelphia Phillies in 1961, and the AL record is 20, done three times. The Orioles extended their record for season-opening defeats and their team mark for consecutive losses — not including five straight losses to end exhibition play.

Twins 13, Indians 7

Tim Laudner, a career .218 hitter, had a pair of three-run homers as Minnesota cooled off Cleveland to snap a six-game losing streak. Laudner is 13-for-37 (.351) so far in 1988.

The victory also broke a five-game losing streak at home for the Twins, the Major's winningest club at home in 1987 at 56-25. The loss snapped Cleveland's three-game winning streak and was only the Indians' second defeat in their last 10 games.

Athletics 5, White Sox 3

Jose Canseco hit a three-run homer and Oakland beat Chicago for its sixth victory in seven games.

Oakland scored four runs in the third off starter Rick Horton, 2-3. With two outs, Mike Gallego singled, moved to second on a walk and scored on Carney Lansford's single. Canseco followed with his Major League-leading seventh homer, a shot into the upper deck in left field at Comiskey Park.

Yankees 5, Blue Jays 3

Reliever Mark Eichhorn threw a wild pitch to allow Rickey Henderson to score and break an eighth-inning tie as New York beat Toronto at Yankee stadium.

With the score 3-3, Henderson opened the eighth with a single and Willie Randolph followed with a walk. One out later, on Eichhorn's 1-2 pitch to Jack Clark, Henderson and Randolph attempted a double steal and Henderson scored when the pitch bounced away from catcher Ernie Whit.

Padres 3, Astros 0

Andy Hawkins was an unlikely hero for the San Diego Padres.

Hawkins, who hadn't pitched a shutout in almost two years and entered the game with a 6.75 earned run average, pitched a one-hitter yesterday as the Padres beat the Houston Astros 3-0 and completed a sweep of their three-game series in San Diego.

Bill Doran spoiled the no-hitter with a lead off single in the seventh, but was quickly erased on a double play. Elsewhere in the National League, Pittsburgh beat Chicago 4-2, St. Louis edged New York 5-4, Atlanta downed Cincinnati 4-1, Montreal beat Philadelphia 3-1 and Los Angeles blanked San Francisco 4-0.

The Padres took a 1-0 lead in the fifth on rookie Roberto Alomar's RBI-single off starter Jim Deshaies, 1-2. San Diego made it 3-0 in the eighth on an RBI-triple by Marvell Wynne and a run-scoring bunt single by Benito Santiago.

Pirates 4, Cubs 2

Darnell Coles hit a tie-breaking single and Rafael Belliard followed with a run-scoring triple in the fourth inning as streaking Pittsburgh completed a three-game sweep at Three Rivers stadium.

Bob Walk, 3-1, held the Cubs to two runs on six hits over 6-2-3 innings as the Pirates won for the 11th time in 13 games, including five of six against the Cubs. The Pirates, who are leading the NL East by two games, are 8-1 at home this season.

Cardinals 5, Mets 4

Willie McGee singled through a drawn-in infield to snap a tie in the seventh inning as St. Louis beat visiting New York for the first time in six games this season.

Bob Horner's sacrifice fly and Tom Brunansky's RBI-single capped a three-run rally that gave St. Louis a 5-2 lead in the seventh.

Evert brushes aside Navratilova

HOUSTON, April 25. (UPI): Chris Evert, leaving her vaunted rival in a state of exasperation, yesterday defeated Martina Navratilova 6-0, 6-4 to win the $250,000 Virginia Slims of Houston.

Evert failed to hold her serve just once in winning this tournament for the third straight time.

"I was psyched up for this match," said Evert, the No. 2 seed behind Navratilova. "Martina was pressing. She had too many errors. I don't know if she was nervous or just off. I think she's had a tough three weeks, and I got her at a vulnerable time."

"I got a thrill out of beating Martina, a thrill out of respect, not ego or pride. I think she's a great player."

Navratilova, who lost to Evert 6-2, 7-5 in the semifinals of the Australian Open this year, double-faulted six times, including the final point of the match. She committed 47 unforced errors.

Navratilova, ranked second in the world behind Steffi Graf, still holds a 40-37 head-to-head edge over Evert since 1973.

Laugh

"I'm still trying to figure out what happened," Navratilova said. "I don't know whether to laugh or cry... it was so pitiful."

"There's no reason, I should lose to her. She's a great player, but I'm better. She can't hurt me. But I double-faulted all over the place and had too many unforced errors. It was pathetic, just pathetic."

Evert, of Boca Raton, Florida, and ranked No. 3 in the world, won $50,000. Navratilova of Fort Worth, Texas, won $22,500.

Sunday's championship was a rematch of last year's final won by Evert 3-6, 6-1, 7-6 (7-4). Evert also won the 1986 championship against Kathy Rinaldi.

In yesterday's doubles championship, Karina Adams and Zina Garrison defeated Navratilova and Lori McNeil 6-7 (4-7), 6-2, 6-4.

"I thought it was Chris, but I couldn't get going in doubles either," Navratilova said. "I was pushing the ball instead of hitting through. I'm very disappointed and disgusted in myself."

Mansdorf takes Connors to task

TULSA, Oklahoma, April 25. (AP): Amos Mansdorf took advantage of sloppy play by Jimmy Connors to defeat the American 2-6, 7-5, 6-4 yesterday in the finals of the Bank of Oklahoma Tennis Classic.

And in doubles finals, Robert Seguso and Scott Davis scored a 7-6 (8-6), 6-1 victory over Mansdorf and Van Rensburg. The winning doubles pair split $5,000.

Connors, four-time winner of the round-robin event, seemed to have the singles match well in hand when he broke Mansdorf in the third game of the second set for a 2-1 lead.

Gooch plays Kent again with Sunday League 90

LONDON, April 25. (Reuters): Graham Gooch, who hit his highest score in first-class cricket of 275 for Essex against Kent on Saturday, tormented the same opponents in the Sunday League by hammering 90.

England opener Gooch made his runs from 87 deliveries and struck 10 fours, sweeping Essex to a nine-wicket victory at Chelmsford on the opening day of the 40 overs competition.

Gooch shared a first-wicket partnership of 145 in 29 overs with Brian Hardie, who hit an unbeaten 78, and Essex reached their target at 202 for one with 21 balls to spare. Kent had been restricted to 201 for eight largely by medium-pace Don Topley, who took three for 46.

Title holders Worcestershire went down by seven wickets at Old Trafford where Lancashire were thrust firmly towards success by Sri Lankan-born Gahan Mendis (43), who opened with a stand of 92 in 17 overs. Victory came at 176 for three with 22 balls left.

Worcestershire were given early momentum by a vigorous 39 from Ian Botham, in his Sunday role as an opener, but only former Lancashire all-rounder Steve O'Shaughnessy, with exactly 50 in 50 balls, sustained the tempo. Worcestershire made 172 for eight.

Hampshire's long-serving left-handed batsman David Turner made the first hundred of the 1988 competition, but his unbeaten 103 was not enough to overcome Surrey, who won by 22 runs at Southampton.

Former England opener David Smith hit 75 in 85 balls to help Surrey to 236 for nine but Turner, who made his county debut 20 years ago, stole the spotlight. He and South African Steve Jefferies put on 95 for the fifth wicket, but Hampshire ended on 214 for five.

MADRID, April 25. (Reuters): South African Brian Mitchell is confident of a clear-cut victory when he defends his World Boxing Association (WBA) junior-lightweight world title again against Puerto Rico's Jose Rivera tomorrow.

Mitchell barely managed to escape with his title when he fought Rivera last year in San Juan. He battled back then from a fourth-round knockdown to earn a draw and retain the crown.

"I shall win," said Mitchell, who tangles with Rivera at the 900-seat capacity Scala Melia dance hall. "I don't know in which round, but I am sure of retaining the crown."

Lendl outlasts Jaite for Monte Carlo title

MONTE CARLO, April 25. (Reuters): World number one Ivan Lendl, playing his first tournament in two months, won the Monte Carlo Open title when he defeated seventh seed Martin Jaite of Argentina 5-7 6-4 7-5 6-3 yesterday.

Lendl, sidelined since the end of February by a stress fracture in his right foot, had considerably difficulty overcoming his 23-year-old opponent in a match which lasted 3-3/4 hours.

Strong

The Czechoslovak top seed made several mistakes during the match but finally proved too strong for Jaite and clinched the title for the second time, having won it the last time he played in the tournament in 1985.

Lendl broke Jaite's service in the opening game, but failed to capitalise on his advantage, staying back to battle it out from the baseline.

Jaite, growing more adventurous, broke back in the sixth game and had a chance to take the first set at 5-4 but hit his service return too long.

The Argentine, however, made no mistake when he earned his second set-point, hitting an awkward backhand which Lendl could not return.

Lendl gained an immediate break at the start of the second set as the first three games went against service, and appeared to be well on his way at 5-2 after breaking Jaite again.

But despite saving five break-points, Lendl failed to hold his service in the following game, and had to wait to the tenth game before squaring the match at one set all.

Jaite went 3-1 up in the third set when Lendl, in some disarray, double-faulted for the third time in the match.

But the Czech, visibly irritated by his mistakes, recovered quickly and reeled off four games in a row to lead 5-3, hitting two aces in the eighth game.

Jaite pulled back to 5-5 but dropped his service in the next game. Lendl squandered three set-points at 6-5, one with another double-fault, but staved off two break-points to clinch the set with an overhead smash.

Lendl closed in for the title when he broke Jaite in the fifth game of the fourth set.

He earned two match-points in the ninth, and although Jaite saved the first, he lost the match on the second when Lendl beat him with a forehand cross-court pass.

Lendl said afterwards: "I had so many chances and I didn't do anything with them."

"I should have won the first set relatively easily. I should have won the second set about 6-2. I should have won the third set about 6-2. The fourth set was the only one in which, if someone got a chance, he took advantage of it."

Lendl added: "I was really annoyed with myself at first. Then after the second set I saw that he was getting really tired and I realised the higher I hit the ball the better it is for me. He made more errors, so that's what I tried to do."

Jaite, beaten by Lendl in their two previous encounters in 1985, disagreed with Lendl's assessment of his condition.

"I was not tired. I was tired when I arrived in the locker room and sat in my seat after the match. Maybe at the end of the match I was tired," he said.

Jaite said the third set had been very important. "At 3-1 I wasn't able to take advantage of the situation, then in the fourth set it was very difficult."

"He played well but he made mistakes — a lot of mistakes in the first set."
